Popayan, pr. New Grenada, bounded N. by Llanos de Neiva, W. by Choco and the Pacific, E. by Quixos, and S. by Atacames. It is 128 leagues long, from N. to S., and about 100 from E. to W. It is for the most part rough and mountainous; the climate is very unequal; the district of Barbacoas, on the sea shore, is excessively hot, while on the high mountains in the interior, the cold is intense; tempests and earthquakes are more frequent in Popayan than even in Quito. The soil and productions are various. Grain and fruits abound; horses, cattle, and sheep are numerous. Among the plants is the cocoa or betel, which is chewed by the natives as in the East Indies. The central and loftiest of the three parallel chains of the Andes runs through the northern part of Popayan. It is of great elevation, having many summits, which tower above the region of perpetual snow. It is crossed by two roads, which are passed with great difficulty. The one most frequented is that of Guanacas, in Lat. 4. 36. N., between Popayan and the small town of La Plata; the highest point of this pass is 11,499 feet.

Popayan, city, New Grenada, capital of the above province; 190 N. Quito, 195 SSW. Santa Fe. Lon. 76. 32. W. Lat. 2. 28. N. Pop. in 1802, upwards of 25,000, a large proportion of Spanish descent. Bp. see. It is situated on an extensive plain, 5,905 feet above the level of the sea, having an uninterrupted prospect to the north, with a mountain of middling height, on the east named M, from its resemblance to that letter. A river rises from the mountain and flows rapidly through the city; and through the plain, about a league from the city, flows the Cauca, with a broad and rapid current, subject to great inundations. Popayan was founded by Benalcazar, in 1537, and is the most ancient city erected by Europeans in this part of America. The streets are all straight, regular, broad, and level; the buildings mostly of only one story, and though constructed of unburnt brick, are very handsome. It has a beautiful grand square, and several small ones. It contains a cathedral, several churches and convents, 2 nunneries, and a royal mint, the annual coinage of which is estimated at a million of dollars.

Port Louis, s-p. on W. coast of Guadaloupe. Lon. 61. 33. W. Lat. 16. 39. N.

Port Louis, s-p. & principal town of Mauritius, residence of the governor and his council, situated on W. side of the island, in a valley, surrounded with high mountains. Lon. 57. 32. E. Lat. 20. 10. S. Pop. 8,000 whites, & 12,000 blacks. The houses are in general small, and consist of only one story, with garrets; they are nevertheless disposed with great convenience. The town is irregular, as it was originally begun without any settled plan; and every one was permitted to build according to the suggestions of his own fancy. The quays are very commodious, both for the loading and unloading of small vessels. Towards the middle of the town there is a large space, surrounded with a high stone wall, which contains the buildings appropriated to the slaves of the Company, as well as the public stables, &c. The port is not large, and it has been rendered less by two ships, which sunk almost in the middle of it.

The entrance of it is narrow, and defended by two batteries on two low points of land, almost opposite to each other. About two or three miles to the west of the town, there is a considerable river, called La Grand Rivière, from whence the town and harbour are supplied with fresh water; and at the mouth of it a powder-mill is erected. There is a guard house on the summit of a high steep mountain, at the western extremity of the town, where a flag is hoisted when a vessel is discovered in the offing. At the entrance of the harbour is an island called Isle des Tonneliers, on which are several redoubts and batteries, well furnished with heavy artillery to defend the town.—In Sept. 1816, this town was almost entirely consumed by fire, no less than 1,200 houses being burnt, but it has since been rebuilt in a more substantial manner.

Port Louis, (Le,) or Blavet, t. France, in Morbihan, at the mouth of the Blavet; 3 S. L'Orient. Lon. 3. 16. W. Lat. 47. 43. N. Pop. 2,630. It is situated at the extremity of a peninsula, defended by a citadel surrounded by the sea and rocks difficult to avoid. The road is spacious, and the harbour secure.

Port Mahon, (an. Portus Magonis,) s-p. Minorca. Lon. 4. 5. E. Lat. 39. 52. N. Pop. 2,071. It is the capital of a district; is built chiefly on lofty rocks; the houses are generally good, being all provided with cisterns, but the streets are uneven, rough, and badly paved with flints. The harbour is celebrated, being one of the safest and most convenient in the Mediterranean, with a sufficient depth and extent to hold a fleet of ships of war; but at the entrance there are some shoals. Fort St. Philip in the neighbourhood was noted in the maritime wars of the last century.

Port au Prince, s-p. Hispaniola, situated on W. coast. Lon. 72. 27. W. Lat. 18. 34. N. Population, in 1790, about 15,000. The country in the environs produces cotton, indigo, sugar, and coffee. In the year 1770, great part of the town was destroyed by an earthquake. In 1791, the town was set on fire, and great part of it burned down; and in 1794, it was taken by the English. Except in time of war it was considered as the capital of the French part of Hispaniola. In 1790, it consisted of upwards of 600 houses, & contained 2,754 white inhabitants. The situation is low and marshy, and the climate in consequence very unhealthy. It is surrounded moreover by hills, which command the harbour; but both the hills and the valleys are abundantly fertile. To the east is situated the noble plain of Cul de Sac, extending from 30 to 40 miles in length, by 9 in breadth; and it contains 150 sugar plantations; most of which are capable of being watered in times of drought by canals, admirably contrived & disposed for that purpose. The circumjacent mountains are clothed with plantations of coffee, which extended quite to the Spanish settlements. On the 15th of August, 1820, a fire broke out in this town, which destroyed upwards of 600 houses. The loss was estimated at $5,000,000. It is the capital of president Boyer.

Port Royal, s-p. Jamaica; 20 SW. Kingston. Lon. 76. 45. W. Lat. 18. 0. N. It is situated on S. side of the island, on a narrow neck of land, in which a thousand sail of ships could anchor with the greatest convenience and safety; and the water was so deep at the quay of Port Royal, that vessels of the greatest burthen could lay their broadsides to the wharfs, and load or unload with but little trouble and at a small expense. It contained 2,000 houses, very handsomely built, and few places in the world could be compared to this town for trade, wealth, & an entire corruption of manners. In this flourishing state it continued till the 9th of June, 1692, when a dreadful earthquake, which seemed to shake the very foundations of the island, overwhelmed Port Royal, and buried nine-tenths of it 8 fathoms under water. They, however, rebuilt the town after this destructive shock; but about 10 years after, it was laid in ashes by a terrible fire. Notwithstanding this second catastrophe, the extraordinary convenience of the harbour tempted them to rebuild it again. But in the year 1722, one of the most dreadful hurricanes ever known, reduced it a third time to a heap of ruins. Warned by these extraordinary calamities, which seemed to mark out this spot as a place devoted to destruction, the custom house and public offices were removed by an act of the assembly, and no market suffered to be held here for the future. It contains at present about 200 houses, a navy yard, a hospital, and barracks for a regiment of soldiers; the fortifications are kept in repair.

Portland, p-t. & port of entry, Cumberland co. Maine; 54 NNE. Portsmouth, 115 NNE. Boston, W. 554. Lon. 70. 20. W. Lat. 43. 39. N. P. in 1800, 3,677; in 1810, 7,169; in 1820, 8,531. It is a very pleasant town, delightfully situated on a peninsula in Casco bay. It is the shire town of the county, the seat of the state government, and in point of population, wealth, and commerce, the most considerable town in Maine. It contains a handsome house for the meeting of the legislature, a very elegant brick court house, an alms house, a market house, a town house, 2 banks, an insurance office, an academy, 4 boarding schools for young ladies, various schools, public and private, a town library of 1,300 volumes, an apprentices library of 900 volumes, and 10 houses of public worship, 3 for Congregationalists, 2 for Baptists, 1 for Episcopalians, 2 for Methodists, 1 for Friends, and 1 for Universalists. Five of the meeting houses are furnished with bells. The town is generally very well built, a large proportion of the public and private buildings are of brick, and many of them are elegant.

The harbour of Portland is one of the best on the continent. It is safe and capacious, easy of access, and is never frozen over, except for a few days during the severity of winter. On a headland, in Cape Elizabeth, near the entrance of the harbour, there is a stone light house 70 feet high, erected in 1790. The town is defended by Forts Preble and Scammel, two fine forts on opposite sides of the ship channel, 1 1-2 miles from the light house, both mounting 35 pieces of cannon. At the east end of the town is Fort Burrows, in the rear of which are some other military works. On the highest eminence of Mount Joy's neck, on NE. side of the town stands an observatory, about 70 feet high, which affords an extensive, variegated, and beautiful view of the town, the harbour, the islands, and the interior country.

The situation of Portland with regard to an extensive and growing back country, is such as to insure to it extensive business and high commercial importance. The exports consist chiefly of timber, beef, fish, butter, &c. The shipping is principally employed in the fisheries, coasting business, and the trade to the West Indies, Russia, and of late to the East Indies. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 33,619 tons. A water communication between Portland and Sebago lake, is projected, which may be formed by opening a canal about 6 miles long; thence by a short canal from Sebago lake to Long pond: by this means a water conveyance of more than 40 miles will be effected.—Portland was formerly included in Falmouth, and in 1775, the principal part of the town was burnt by the British. It was incorporated by its present name in 1786.

Porto Bello, or St. Philipe de Puerto Bello, s-p. America, in the province of Panama, on the N. coast of the isthmus of Darien; 60 N. Panama. Lon. 79. 35. W. Lat. 9. 33. N. H. 130. Most of the houses are built with wood. In some the first story is of stone, and the remainder of wood. They are most of them remarkably spacious. The town consists of one principal street, extending along the strand, having several others crossing it, and running from the declivity of the mountain to the shore; together with some lanes parallel to the principal street, where the ground will admit of it. It has two squares, one opposite to the custom house, which is a stone structure, built on the quay; the other faces the great church, which is also of stone, large and decently ornamented, and served by a vicar, and some other priests, who are natives of the country. Besides the great church, there are also 2 convents. At the E. end of the town, in the road to Panama, is a quarter called Guinea, being the place where all the negroes of both sexes, whether slaves or free, have their habitation. This quarter was greatly crowded when the galleons arrived at Porto Bello, most of the inhabitants of the town retiring hither for the sake of letting their houses.

Porto Bello, which is now but thinly inhabited, was in the time of the galleons one of the most populous places in the world. Its situation on the isthmus, between the South and North sea, the goodness of its harbour, and its small distance from Panama, gave it the preference to all other places, for the rendezvous of the joint commerce of Spain and Peru, at its fair. The climate of this city is extremely bad, the heat is excessive, and is increased by the situation of the town, being hemmed in on all sides by lofty mountains, so as not to admit a free passage to the air.

Porto Praya, t. St. Jago, one of the Cape Verde islands, situated on a sharp rock, on E. side of the island. Lon. 23. 30. W. Lat. 14. 53. N. The harbour is good, and seldom destitute of a considerable number of shipping. It has long been a place where the outward-bound Guinea and Indiamen have been accustomed to touch at for water and refreshments. The natives bring down to the shore the produce of the country for sale, to the mariners and passengers; and the whole coast resembles a fair. Porto Praya is the residence of the governor-general of the Portuguese settlements, at Cape Verde, on the coast of Africa, and on the Cape Verde islands. With the exception of 6 or 8 houses of the chief officers, which are plastered and whitewashed, and of the church, this capital of the Cape Verde islands consists of three rows of hovels, constructed of stones and mud, and chiefly inhabited by negroes.

Porto Rico, island in the West-Indies, belonging to Spain, 60 E. Hispaniola; about 110 miles in length from E. to W., and 36 in breadth from N. to S. Pop. stated in 1778, at 80,660; slaves, 6,353. Pop. according to Le Dru in 1794, 136,000. It was discovered by Christopher Columbus, in the year 1493, and was at that time supposed to contain 600,000 inhabitants. The island is extremely fertile, and enjoys all the benefits of the most temperate climate. It is beautifully diversified with woods, hills, and valleys, and well watered with a variety of streams that descend from the mountains. Its meadows are very rich; and the cattle, of which they feed great plenty, were originally imported from Old Spain. The north part of the island, which is the most barren, is said to contain various mines of silver and gold; and it is confidently affirmed that gold dust is often found in the sands of their rivers. Many sugar mills are built, and the island produces all the different fruits which are common in the West Indies. The woods are stored with parrots, wild pigeons, and other fowl. According to Humboldt, the dollars imported into Porto Rico, in 1803, amounted to 11,000,000; and the exports consisted of produce to the value of 9,000,000. The capital is St. Juan de Porto Rico. Porto Santo, small island, in the Atlantic, in the immediate vicinity of Madeira. It was then uninhabited; but has ever since continued peopled by the Portuguese, and in their possession. It is but small, not much exceeding 15 miles in compass. It has a good harbour, and only one bay, where ships may ride securely against all winds, except the SW. It is in this bay that ships going or returning from India, stop to refit and refresh, which is all the trade the inhabitants enjoy. The island produces wheat and corn in abundance; also cows, wild-boars, and rabbits; the latter in incredible numbers. But its most valuable productions for export, are dragon's blood, honey, wax, and fish. Lon. 16. 17. W. Lat. 33. 5. N. Pop. 1,200. Sq. m. 8.

The harbour is convenient and safe, having at high tides about 20 feet of water. The streets are straight and sufficiently wide, but the houses are mean, mostly of only one story, built of soft brick covered with plaster. On the banks of the river running at the foot of the hill on which the town stands, there is a village of nearly equal extent, consisting of about 400 huts.—Brazil was first discovered by Cabral, in the spot where this town stands.

Portsea Island, isl. England, about 14 miles in circ., between Portsmouth harbour and Langston harbour, and separated from the main land of Hampshire by a narrow channel, over which is a bridge. In this island are Portsmouth and Portsea.

Portsea, t. Eng., in Hants, adjoining to Portsmouth, built on what was formerly called Portsmouth Common, on condition that if the enemy should land, the houses were to be thrown down, without any compensation to the owners. The population is included with that of Portsmouth.

Portsmouth, p-t. & port of entry, Rockingham co. N. H., on S. side of the Piscataqua, 3 miles from the sea; 14 ENE. Exeter, 24 N. Newburyport, 45 ESE. Concord, 54 SSW. Portland, 56 N. by E. Boston, W. 500. Lon. 70. 45. W. Lat. 43. 5. N. Pop. in 1810, 6,934; in 1820, 7,327; males 3,528; females 3,789. It is the most considerable town, and the only seaport in New Hampshire. It has a pleasant and healthy situation, and is handsomely built. Some of the houses are elegant, and but a small proportion of them are mean. It has 32 streets, 40 lanes, 12 alleys, and contains a court house, a jail, an almshouse, an academy, an athenæum, 2 market houses, a town hall, a custom house, an insurance office, five banks, including a branch of the United States bank, and seven houses of public worship, 3 for Congregationalists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Universalists. The Episcopal church is a spacious and elegant brick edifice, from the cupola of which there is a handsome view of the town, the river, the islands, and the surrounding country.

Portsmouth is well situated for trade, and has considerable commerce. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 23,335 tons. The harbour is one of the best in the U. S. having through its whole passage up to the town, 42 feet of water at low tide, and owing to the rapidity of the current, which is equal to 5 miles an hour, it is never frozen. It is so defended against storms by the adjacent land, that ships may securely ride here in any season of the year; and it is almost impregnable by its natural situation. The entrance is defended by 2 forts, Fort Constitution, on Great island, and Fort M'Clary, opposite to it, in Kittery. There are three other forts built for the defence of the harbour, but not garrisoned at present. There is also a light house on Great isl.

On the 26th of Dec. 1802, 120 buildings, in 1806, 20 buildings, including the Episcopal church, and in 1813, 173 buildings were destroyed in this town by fire. The parts which were burnt by these fires have been mostly rebuilt with brick. An elegant bridge was erected, in 1822, across the Piscataqua, connecting Portsmouth with Kittery, in Maine.

In the Piscataqua, opposite to the town, is Navy island, on which there is a U. S. navy yard. The island belongs to the general government, and is convenient for building ships of war. It contains a large ship house, a hospital, barracks, store houses, 3 wet docks, &c. The Washington, a 74 gun ship, was launched here in 1814; and another 74 has been lately built here.

Portsmouth, p-t. Newport co. R. I., on N. end of the island of R. I.; 7 N. Newport, W. 428. Pop. 1,645. It is connected with Tiverton, by a bridge, and with Bristol by a ferry. In NW. part of the township there is a coal mine.

Portsmouth, p-t. Norfolk co. Va., on SW. side of Elizabeth river, opposite to Norfolk, one mile distant from it; both of which constitute one port of entry; 110 E. by S. Petersburg, W. 231. Pop. 1,702. It is pleasantly situated, and regularly laid out, and contains a court house, a jail, a sugar refinery, and 4 houses of public worship, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Roman Catholics. The courts for the county of Norfolk are held here. In 1821, March 21, about 60 buildings in this town were consumed by fire.

Portsmouth, p-t. & cap. Scioto co. Ohio, on the east bank of the Scioto, just above its junction with the Ohio; 45 S. Chillicothe, 44 W. Gallipolis, W. 451. Pop. 527. It is advantageously situated, and contains a court house, a jail, and has some trade.—Near this town are considerable remains of ancient works.

Portsmouth, s-p. Eng., in Hampshire, 27 S. Winchester, 72 SW. London. Lon. 1. 6. W. Lat. 50. 47. N. Pop. of the town and suburbs, 40,567, of whom 7,103 belong to the town, and 31,365 to Portsea. H. 6,852. It is situated on W. side of the island of Portsea, at the mouth of a bay in the English channel, termed Portsmouth harbour, and consists of the old town of Portsmouth included within its fortified walls, and the new town of Portsea, which was begun about a century ago. It is the most important maritime place in England, and is the principal rendezvous of the royal navy. The harbour excels every other in Great Britain for capaciousness, depth, and security, and is capable of containing almost the whole British navy. It is thoroughly defended from any assaults of an enemy by the number and strength of its batteries, forming the most complete fortress in Great Britain, and deemed impregnable. Portsmouth dock yard, situated within the precincts of Portsea, is the grand naval arsenal of England, and much the greatest in the kingdom, containing an area of 100 acres. In time of war upwards of 4,000 workmen are here employed. Here is a royal naval college, limited to 100 students in time of war, and 75 in time of peace; also a school of naval architecture in which the students, not exceeding 24 in number are educated, free of expense.

Portsmouth contains a number of churches and meeting houses for dissenters, hospitals, and various other public buildings and institutions. It sends 2 members to parliament. Market on Thursday and Saturday, with a small one on Tuesday; a fair commencing July 10, and continuing a fortnight; and another on July 26, on Portsdown hill.—Native, Jonas Hanway.

37,700 3,683,000

Population, &c. The population has never been correctly ascertained. The above statement was published in 1802, and computed by multiplying the number of houses by 5, probably a little above the real average. Another estimate states it at 3,550,000. Sq. m. stated from 35,000 to 40,870. H. 763,637. Cities 21. Villages 548. Parishes 4,267.

Cities. Lisbon is the capital. The other principal towns are Oporto, Elvas, Coimbra, Braga, St. Ubes, and Evora.

Foreign possessions. The Portuguese possessions in America, are Brazil and part of Guiana; in Africa, Madeira, the Azores, and Cape Verde islands, with settlements in Guinea, Angola, and Mozambique; and in Asia, Goa, Timor, and Macao.

Government. The government is monarchical, with a cortes or representative body like that of Spain. In 1807, the royal family removed to Brazil, and Portugal was in a state of colonial dependence on Brazil, till 1821, when the royal family returned to Lisbon.

Religion. The religion is Roman Catholic, in a form much more grossly superstitious than in France. There is 1 patriarch at Lisbon; there are 2 archbishops, those of Braga & Evora; and 13 bishops; 3 ecclesiastical colleges, upwards 400 monasteries, and about 150 female convents. The inferior clergy are numerous, but very poor.

Inhabitants. The Portuguese are a backward nation with regard to the arts of civilized life. Agriculture, manufactures, and education are all in a low state. The language has a close resemblance to the Spanish. There is but one university, that of Coimbra. There are only 3 or 4 newspapers, and 1 critical journal.

Rivers, &c. The chief rivers are the Tagus, Duero, Minho, Mondego, and Guadiana. There are no lakes, but mineral and hot springs are numerous.

Face of the country, &c. The face of the country is much diversified by mountains and plains. The country is penetrated by some of the great mountain chains of Spain, of which the most remarkable are the Serra de Estrella and the Serra de Monchique.—The climate is milder than in Spain, owing to the height of the mountains and the great extent of sea coast.

Soil and productions. The soil is light but fertile, though miserably cultivated. The productions are wheat, barley, oats, flax, hemp, &c. in the high grounds; vines and maize in those of warmer temperature; and rice in the low grounds. The chief fruits are olives, oranges, and lemons. Silk is made of a good quality.

Trade, &c. The commerce is considerable; the exports consist almost wholly of raw produce; wine, salt, and wool. The average annual export of wine is about £2,000,000; of salt £300,000; of wool below £100,000. There are no bank notes in this country, all is paid in gold and silver. Manufactures are in a very backward state.

Potomac, r. U. S., which rises in 2 branches, the north and south, originating in and near the Alleghany mountains, and forms, through its whole course, part of the boundary between Virginia and Maryland. It passes by Shepherds-town, Georgetown, Washington city, Alexandria, Port Tobacco, &c., & flows into Chesapeake bay, between Point Lookout and Smith's point. It is $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles wide at its mouth, and $1\frac{1}{4}$ at Alexandria, 290 miles from the ocean. The termination of the tide water is above 300 m. from the sea, and the river is navigable for ships of the greatest burden through nearly that distance. Its junction with the Shenandoah, at Harper's ferry, is regarded as a great curiosity. See Harper's Ferry. The river has 7 fathoms of water at its mouth, 5 at St. George's island, $4\frac{1}{2}$ at Lower Matchodie, and 3 at Swan's point, and thence to Alexandria. The obstructions to the navigation above Washington are 1. Little falls, 3 miles above the city, descending 37 feet, and shunned by a canal $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, with 3 locks; 2. Great falls, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles higher, descending 76 feet, shunned by a canal with 5 locks; 3. Seneca falls, 6 miles above, descending 10 feet; 4. Shenandoah falls, 60 m. further up, where the river breaks through the Blue Ridge; 5. Hore's falls, 5 miles above. Canals have been constructed around all these falls. The descent of the Potomac, from the mouth of Savage river to Cumberland, 31 miles, is 445 feet; from Cumberland to the Shenandoah falls, 130 miles, 490 feet; at the Shenandoah, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles, 43 feet; from the Shenandoah to the Great falls, 40 miles, 39 feet; from the Great falls to tide water, 12 miles, 143 feet: total descent from the mouth of Savage river to tide water, 219 miles, 1,160 feet.

Potosi, p-t. & cap. Washington co. Missouri; 35 SW. Herculaneum, 42 WSW. St. Genevieve, 60 SSW. St. Louis, 130 ESE. Franklin, W. 939. Potosi and Mine à Burton are separated from each other by Mine creek, a branch of the Merrimac, and form one village, consisting, in 1820, of about 80 buildings, including a court house, a jail, and an academy. The buildings are all of wood, some of them handsome, most of them framed, the rest of logs. The court house is a handsome edifice of 2 stories. The academy had, in 1820, about 50 pupils pursuing the common branches of English education, the learned languages not having yet been introduced.

This town is pleasantly situated in the centre of the mining district, surrounded also by several fine bodies of land, and has a thriving appearance. It has 3 stores, 2 distilleries, 2 flour mills, 1 saw mill, and 9 lead furnaces. The chief business of the place is the manufacture of bar lead. The Mine à Burton has been worked upwards of 40 years, and is said to have yielded 3,000,000 lbs. in a year. The quantity exported from this place latterly has been about 500,000 lbs., but it is expected it will be again greatly increased.

Potosi, pr. Buenos Ayres, which, before 1778, belonged to Peru; bounded N. by Peru, E. by Paraguay and Buenos Ayres, S. by Buenos Ayres, and W. by the Pacific, the Chilian Andes, and the mountains of Arequipa. A great part of it is very mountainous, full of chasms and ravines, of very cold temperature, owing to its great elevation, and barren of vegetable productions. In other parts are deserts, forests, vast plains, and rivers.

Potosi, city, Buenos Ayres, in the above province, in a narrow glen, on a river of the same name; 45 WSW. La Plata, 1,200 SE. Lima, 1,600 NW. Buenos Ayres. Lon. 67. 22. W. Lat. 19. 47. S. It was founded in 1547; the royal mint was established in 1562; and the town increased so rapidly, that in 1611 the population amounted to 160,000, but it has since greatly declined. Pop. in 1714, according to Fresier, 70,000; in 1808, according to Pazos, only 40,000. The country in which it is situated is enclosed in the mountainous district of Porco. The climate is cold; the environs very barren, the valleys being destitute of wood, the sides of the hills covered only with moss, and their summits always capped with snow. The mountain of Potosi, according to L. Goudin, is 16,250 feet above the level of the sea; and, according to Humboldt, 4,397 feet above the plain on which the city is built; the city must therefore be nearly 11,000 feet high. This mountain is the most elevated summit in the vicinity. It is not of difficult ascent; and from its summit is presented a grand and picturesque view of valleys, lakes, and surrounding mountains.

The streets are narrow and irregular; the houses are built of stone or brick, of only one story, with balconies of wood, but without chimneys. The city contains 3 monasteries, 5 convents, a hospital, a college, 19 parish chh., and a mint of 2 stories, 450 feet long.—The mines were discovered by Diego Hualca, an Indian peasant, when pursuing wild goats. Arriving at a steep place, he laid hold of a small shrub to prevent himself from falling, but the shrub, being unable to support his weight, was torn up by the roots, and disclosed to the astonished hunter a rich mass of silver, lumps of which adhered to the earth, that came away with the plant. Not long afterwards, the discovery was made known, and the mine was opened in 1545. From the time of the first discovery to 1803, these mines have supplied 1,095,500,000 piastres, or £237,358,334 sterling, which has paid the royal duties; and this only includes silver. If the gold and smuggled metals were included, the amount would be much greater. According to the official statement, the amount coined from 1790 to 1794, inclusive, was $27,967,566, i.e. on an average $5,593,513 yearly. The present diminution of the quantity of silver from what it was formerly, is stated by Pazos as 4 to 1; by Humboldt the diminution is stated to be greater; but they are still the richest mines in South America. According to Helms, nothing can equal the ignorance with which the mining operations are conducted; if judiciously managed, the quantity of silver might be doubled. These mines have caused the destruction of thousands of human beings, for in the latter end of the 16th century 16,000 Indians were constantly forced to work in them; at present only 2,000 miners are employed, who are well paid, and work from choice.

Potsdam, p-t. St. Lawrence co. N. Y.; 25 E. Ogdensburg, 90 W. Plattsburg, 100 SW. Montreal, 150 NW. Albany, W. 532. Lon. 75. W. Lat. 44. 40. N. Pop. 1,911. The township is watered by Racket river, is of a gently uneven surface, has a good soil, and contains iron ore, 2 quarries of white marble, and mineral springs. It was first settled in 1804. A flourishing village is situated on Racket river, at falls of 10 feet, which afford extensive water privileges for mills and manufactories. The village contains a Presbyterian and a Methodist meeting-house, an academy, a printing office, various mills and manufactories, and 55 families.

Potsdam, gov. Pru., in Brandenburg, comprising the districts formerly termed Ucker Mark, Mark of Pregnitz, and the greatest part of the Middle Mark. It is divided into 13 circles. Pop. 487,230. Sq. m. 7,971. The chief towns are Potsdam, Brandenburg, Prenzlau, Spandau, and Ruppın. It is bounded on the NW. by the Elbe and Havel; and on the NE. by the Oder. It forms an extensive plain, having a light sandy soil, with occasional spots, particularly on the rivers, of great fertility; the country for the most part poor and thinly peopled; the climate cold, but healthy.

Potsdam, city, Pru., in Brandenburg, capital of the government of the same name; 15 WSW. Berlin, 60 ENE. Dresden. Lon. 12. 5. E. Lat. 52. 25. N. Pop. in 1818, 17,384, and including the military 23,642. H. 1,666. It is situated on N. side of the Havel, which here spreads its waters in one expanse after another, like a succession of lakes. Potsdam is to Berlin, what Versailles is to Paris, and has been since the close of the 17th century the occasional residence of the court; but indebted for its chief improvements to Frederick II. It is nearly in the form of a square, surrounded by a wall and ditch, with 4 gates towards the land, and 4 towards the river. The streets are regular and spacious, but not yet all paved. Several of them are built in a manner to resemble rows of palaces, the fronts being all of stone, while the rest of the houses are finished in an inferior style. On the whole, Potsdam may vie in beauty with Mannheim or any other town in Germany.

The palace, on the Havel, is a magnificent structure, of which the most striking ornaments are a colonnade, cupola, and marble staircase. Connected with it are a theatre, menagerie, spacious stables, and extensive gardens; and in front a square for manœuvring the troops of the garrison.—Potsdam contains 7 churches, a lyceum, other schools and charitable institutions, and has some manufactures. The palace of Sans-Souci, the favourite retreat of Frederick II., is $\frac{3}{4}$ m. NW. Potsdam, on an eminence commanding a beautiful prospect. It is of only 1 story, with a round pavilion at each end. It has two appended buildings, 1 for a collection of paintings, the other for court entertainments; and in the garden, a temple, containing a cabinet of statues, gems, and medals.

Poughkeepsie, p-t. & cap. Dutchess co. N. Y., on E. bank of the Hudson, 75 N. New York, 85 S. Albany, W. 299. Lat. 41. 30. N. Pop. in 1810, 4,670; in 1820, 5,726; exclusive of the township 3,401. The township is 10 miles in length from north to south, and about $3\frac{1}{2}$ from east to west, and has 5 landings with extensive store houses, wharfs, &c. Fall creek which passes by the principal village, and Wappinger's creek on the east side of the township, afford excellent and numerous seats for mills, and other water works. At the village of Barnegat in the SW. part of the township, large quantities of excellent lime are manufactured.

The village of Poughkeepsie is situated on a plain a mile east of the Hudson, and contains a court house of stone, a jail, a bank, an academy with 4 teachers, 5 houses of public worship, 1 for Dutch Reformed, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Baptists, and 1 for Methodists, and 1 for Friends, and had, in 1812, 422 dwelling houses, and 49 stores, shops, &c. Many of the old houses are of stone, but those recently erected are mostly of wood, with a number of brick. Poughkeepsie is a flourishing town, situated in one of the most wealthy and best agricultural counties in the state, and has an extensive trade. Here are three printing offices, from each of which is issued a weekly newspaper. The principal manufacturing establishments are 1 nail, 1 woollen, and 2 cotton manufactories, 2 breweries, 1 distillery, and 1 paper mill.

Pozzuolo, (an. Puteoli), t. Naples, in Lavora, situated on a gulf of the Mediterranean, to which it gives name; 6 W. Naples. Pop. 9,010. Bp. see. It was at one time a republic, afterwards a Roman colony. Here are several remains of Roman antiquity, such as an amphitheatre, part of a temple of Augustus, which forms the cathedral. It contains 2 parish churches, and 8 convents. This city was, during a very long course of years, the chief seaport town and mart of the people of Cumæa, and the rendezvous of the merchants of Italy, Sicily, and Greece. It is said to be about 4 or 5 miles round; and the many ruins of splendid edifices are proofs of its ancient magnificence. All those, which lie along the shore, from its promontory to the point nearest to the city, and which antiquaries called Piscinæ Veteres, formed a long street, or kind of quay, filled with shops, particularly those of goldsmiths and lapidaries, stocked with riches and curiosities of every kind.

Prabat, t. Siam, on a river which runs into the Mecon, 20 N. Louvo. It is remarkable for a piece of superstition, whence the place takes its name; for bat in the Balli, or Palli language, signifies a foot, and pra any thing worthy of veneration and respect. This relick is the print of a man's foot upon a rock, thirteen or fourteen inches deep, and five or six times longer than the natural size. The Siamese not only adore it themselves, but believe that the elephants, rhinoceroses, and other wild beasts, do likewise repair thither to worship it when no person is present. The king goes once a year with great pomp to pay his devoirs to this miraculous impression, which is covered with a plate of gold, within a chapel erected for the purpose.

Pracels, range of small islands and rocks in the Chinese sea, about 60 E. Cochin-china. Their navigation is dangerous, as there are several intercurrents among them. They extend near 300 miles in length, and about 60 in breadth, from Lon. 110. to 111. E. Lat. 11. 40. to 16. 10. N.

Prague, city, capital of Bohemia, on the Muldau; 70 SSE. Dresden, 140 NNW. Vienna, 240. E. Mentz. Lon. 14. 25. E. Lat. 50. 5. N. Pop. 81,965; exclusive of the military in 1817, 76,098; Jews, 6,783. H. 3,244. Abp see. It is situated on both sides of the river, of irregular form, surrounded by a moat and earthen mound, covering a large space of ground, being about 10 miles in circuit. The elevation of the ground in different parts renders the city capable of a temporary defence. It consists of four parts, the old town, new town, small side, and Radschin. The Muldau is wide, but too shallow to be navigable, and is crossed by a bridge 1,850 feet long. The environs are diversified, and have a number of gardens and public walks.

Prague is a very ancient city, and contains 318 streets, 24 larger & 17 smaller public places, a royal castle, a Gothic cathedral, 46 Catholic churches, 2 Protestant, 9 synagogues, a university, 3 gymnasia, 2 public libraries, a seminary for schoolmasters, an academy for drawing and painting, an academy of sciences, &c. The houses are chiefly of stone, mostly of old architecture; but few of the churches and other public buildings are good edifices.—The university, the oldest in Germany, was founded in 1348. It consists of 4 faculties, with 45 regular professors, and has a library of upwards of 100,000 vols., and 8,000 MSS. The number of students in 1817, was 880. There is also an observatory, a cabinet of natural history, &c.

Brewing is carried on here on a large scale, and there are extensive manufactures of linen, cotton, silk, and hats; and on a smaller scale, paper, brass-ware, trinketry, plated goods, glass, tobacco, and mathematical and musical instruments. It is the centre of Bohemian traffic, and has some transit trade. It is much more backward in improvements than an English or a French city of similar size.—“The present aspect of Prague,” says Dr. Neale, “is forlorn and decayed; wide deserted streets, dirty Jews, begging monks, ruinous palaces, and mouldering Gothic churches, are the first objects to greet the traveller's eye on his entrance.”—Native, Jerome of Prague.

This town was declared in 1536 the capital of Hungary; and the kings are still crowned here, though Buda is now the seat of government. It stands on a hill of moderate elevation, overlooking the vast plain watered by the Danube, but has no fortifications, and contains but little that is interesting. The town is meanly built; the streets narrow and steep; but the suburbs are neater. It contains a cathedral, several Catholic churches, 1 Lutheran, 1 synagogue, a Catholic and a Lutheran gymnasium; the latter one of the principal in Hungary. Its manufactures, though various, are not extensive. The trade is in a great measure transit, particularly in corn and linen.—It is the residence of the archbishop of Gran.—A peace between France and Austria was signed here Dec. 26, 1805.

Princeton, p-t. N. J., partly in Middlesex and partly in Somerset co.; 10 NE. Trenton, 16 SW. New Brunswick, 40 NE. Philadelphia, 49 SW. New York, W. 178. Lon. 74. 35. W. Lat. 40. 22. N. It is a pleasant town, and contains a college, a theological seminary, a brick Presbyterian church, and upwards of 100 dwelling houses.

The college at this place was founded in 1746 at Elizabethtown; the next year it was removed to Newark, and a royal charter was granted to it in 1748, by the title of the College of New Jersey, which is its corporate name at present. It remained at Newark 10 years, and in 1757, was permanently established at Princeton. Its situation is pleasant and peculiarly healthful, and it has long been one of the most respectable and flourishing seminaries in the United States. The college edifice, is styled Nassau Hall, and is 175 feet by 50, of 4 stories, containing a chapel about 40 feet square, and 60 rooms for students. Besides the principal edifice there are two other buildings, each about 60 feet by 30, containing the library, philosophical apparatus, museum, refectory, recitation rooms, &c. These buildings are all of stone. A president's house and 2 professors' houses belong to the institution. The college has an excellent library of 7, or 8,000 volumes, a large and well selected philosophical apparatus, the orrery constructed by Dr. D. Rittenhouse, and a valuable cabinet of mineralogy and natural history.

The board of trustees consists of 23 members, one half clergymen, the other half laymen. The governor of the state is, ex officio, president of the board. The executive government is composed of a president, who is also a teacher of theology and moral philosophy; a vice president, who is also a professor of languages and belles lettres; a professor of mathematics and natural philosophy; a professor of chemistry, experimental philosophy, and natural history; and 3 tutors. The number of students, in 1820, was 121. The commencement is held on the last Wednesday in September. There are two vacations; the 1st from commencement, 6 weeks; the 2d from the 1st Thursday after the 2d Tuesday in April, 4 weeks.

The Theological Seminary was established as this place in 1812, by the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the U. States, and has 2 professors, one of didactic and polemic theology, and one of ecclesiastical history and church government, and an assistant professor. Partial provision is made for a professor of oriental and biblical literature. The building belonging to the seminary is an elegant stone edifice, 150 feet by 50, of 4 stories, and calculated to accommodate 100 students, and contains also several rooms for public purposes. A union between the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, and the general synod of the Associate Reformed church, has recently been effected, and also a union of their seminaries. By this measure the library of the seminary lately in the city of New York, consisting of 4,000 volumes, has been added to the library of that at Princeton, increasing it to upwards of 6,000 volumes. The number of students, in 1822, was about 80; the whole number who had been members, including the 80, 235. A residence of 3 years is necessary, in order to pass through a complete course of theological instruction in this seminary. Candidates for admission are required to produce testimonials of good natural talents, and good moral and religious character, of being a member in good standing of some regular church, and of having passed through a regular course of academical study. Tuition and the use of the library are afforded free of expense to every student, and there are charitable funds for aiding the indigent.

Providence, co. R. I., bounded N. and E. by Massachusetts, S. by Kent co., and W. by Connecticut. Pop. in 1810, 30,769; in 1820, 35,736.

Providence, p-t., port of entry, & semi-metropolis of R. I., in a county of the same name; 15 NNW. Bristol, 30 N. Newport, 40 SSW. Boston, 58 NE. New London, 70 E. Hartford, W. 416. Lon. 71. 16. W. Lat. 41. 51. N. Pop. in 1800, 7,614; in 1810, 10,071: in 1820, 11,767. It is situated at the head of Providence river, or Narraganset bay, on the west side of the Seekhonk, or Pawtucket, and 35 miles from the ocean. It is a pleasant, well built, and very thriving town, well situated for trade, and has a flourishing commerce, and extensive manufactures. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 20,575 tons. The river is navigable as far as the town for vessels of 900 tons.

Providence is built on both sides of the river, and the two parts are connected by a very elegant bridge, 90 feet in breadth. In point of population, it is the first town in Rhode Island, and the third in New England. It contains a court house, a jail, a market house, a custom house, a university, a public library of about 2,000 volumes, a Friends boarding school, an academy, 5 public schools, 7 banks, including a branch of the United States bank, 4 insurance offices, and 12 houses of public worship; 4 for Baptists, 3 for Congregationalists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Friends, 1 for Methodists, 1 for Universalists, and 1 for Africans. Two of the Congregational, and 1 of the Baptist meeting houses, and the Episcopal church, are among the handsomest edifices of the kind in the United States. Many of the private houses are elegant, and some of them are very finely situated. Among the manufacturing establishments are 3 cotton manufactories, a large woollen manufactory, 2 paper mills, 2 bleaching, dying, and calendering companies, and an air furnace. These manufactories are aided by 3 steam engines. Five newspapers are published here; 3 twice, and 2 once a week. A little to the east are 2 handsome bridges across the river, connecting Providence with Seekhonk.—This town was originally settled, in 1636, by Mr. Roger Williams, to whom is ascribed the honour of establishing the first political community, in which perfect religious toleration was admitted.

Brown University was originally founded at Warren, in 1764, and was removed to Providence, in 1770. It received its present name in 1804, from Nicholas Brown Esq., one of its principal benefactors. It is a respectable and flourishing seminary. Its funds are not large, having arisen solely from individual liberality. There are 2 college edifices, both of brick, and 4 stories high ; one 150 feet long, and 46 wide, with a projection of 10 feet on each side, containing 51 rooms occupied by students, together with rooms for public purposes. The other building, erected in 1822, is 120 feet by 40, and contains 48 rooms. These edifices are delightfully situated in a line, on an eminence, on east side of the town, commanding a fine prospect. The college library contains about 5,000 vols., and there are 2 libraries belonging to 2 literary societies, each containing about 1,200 volumes; the philosophical apparatus is respectable.

The board of trustees is composed of 36 members; of whom 22 must be Baptists, 5 Friends, 5 Episcopalians, and 4 Congregationalists. The number of Fellows, or Learned Faculty, is 12; of these, 8, including the president, must be Baptists; the other 4 may be of any denomination; as also may the professors and tutors. The executive government consists of the president and 8 professors; 1 of law, 1 of moral philosophy and metaphysics, 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy, 1 of anatomy and surgery, 1 of materia medica and botany, 1 of oratory and belles lettres, 1 of the theory and practice of physic, and 1 of chemistry; and 2 tutors. The number of students, in 1822, was 156.—Whole number educated to 1820, 876; ministers 152. The commencement is on the 1st Wednesday of September. There are 3 vacations; the 1st from commencement, 3 weeks; the 2d from the last Wednesday in December, 8 weeks; the 3d from the third Wednesday in May, 2 weeks. There is connected with the university a grammar school, containing usually about 30 students.

The Friends boarding school, belonging to the yearly meeting for New England, is $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile NE. of the university, on an elevated situation, commanding an extensive prospect. The building is a very spacious and elegant edifice of stone and brick. The body of the building is 54 feet by 56, 3 stories high, with 2 wings, each 40 feet by 42, of 2 stories, with a basement story under the whole. It has a superintendent, 2 male and 2 female teachers, and about 70 pupils, with a small library.

Providence, (North,) t. Providence co. R. I., on west side of the Pawtucket. Pop. 2,420. It lies on north side of Providence, and contains several cotton manufactories, a bank, and an air furnace.—Pawtucket village is partly in this township and partly in Seekhonk.

Providence, or New Providence, one of the Bahama islands, and the second in point of size, about 30 miles in length, and 8 in breadth. Lon. 77. 20. W. Lat. 25. 2. N. Its chief commerce arises from the misfortune of those ships that are driven on its coast, or in making a winter's voyage to the continent of America.

are forced to put in for provisions. Fish of various kinds are found in the greatest plenty on the coast; and in some parts of the island are vast numbers of trees and plants. The principal harbour in the island is rendered dangerous by a bar, on which there is not above 16 feet of water. Pop. in 1815, 5,986; of whom 1,720 were whites, 1,074 people of colour, and 3,192 slaves.

Provincetown, p-t. Barnstable co. Mass., near Cape Cod; 44 NE. Barnstable, 116 SE. Boston, W. 543. Pop. 1,252. It is situated on the hook of Cape Cod, 3 SE. Race Point. The harbour, which is one of the best in the state, opens to southward, and has sufficient depth of water for any ships. The houses are of one story, and in order to prevent their being buried in the sand, they are set on piles, that the driving sands may pass under them. The inhabitants depend almost wholly on the fisheries for subsistence. They raise nothing on their lands, but are dependant on the neighbouring towns and on Boston, for every vegetable production. They keep a few cows, which obtain a scanty subsistence from the beach grass and marshes.

PRUSSIA, or THE PRUSSIAN STATES, km. Europe, occupying the north of Poland and great part of the north of Germany, consisting chiefly of two parts, entirely separated from each other. The eastern part forms the main body of the kingdom, and comprises the first 7 provinces in the following table; the western portion lies in the west of Germany on the Rhine, and includes the three last provinces. Lon. between 6. and 23. E. Lat. 49. 20. to 55. 50. N. Length, 800 miles; breadth, from 70 to 300.

Divisions. The kingdom was divided in 1815 into 10 provinces; subdivided into 28 governments, and these again subdivided each into 8, 10, 12, or more circles or districts. Each of the 28 following towns, is the capital of a government of the same name.

Provinces.	Sq.m.	Pop. 1817	Chief Towns.
East Prussia	15,115	870,000	Königsberg Gumbinnen
West Prussia	10,000	580,000	Dantzic Marienwerder
Brandenburg	14,939	1,200,000	Berlin Potsdam Frankfort Stettin
Pomerania	12,363	680,000	Stralsund Cosslin
Silesia	14,861	2,100,000	Breslau Liegnitz Reichenbach Oppeln
Posen	11,261	790,000	Posen Bromberg Magdeburg
Saxony	8,492	1,180,000	Merseburg Erfurt Munster
Westphalia	7,565	1,000,000	Minden Arensberg Cologne
Juliers-Cleves- Berg	3,638	930,000	Dusseldorf Cleves Aix la Chapelle
Lower Rhine	6,432	1,000,000	Coblentz Cleves
Total	104,656	10,330,000

Prussia was first erected into a kingdom in 1701, and has at different times gained large accessions of territory. Pop. in 1740, 3,000,000; in 1790, 6,000,000; in 1802, 8,830,000; in 1817, 10,330,000; in 1820, including Neufchatel, according to Malte Brun, 10,588,157. Annual increase about 147,000.

Cities. The principal cities are Berlin, the capital, Breslau, Königsberg, Dantzic, Cologne, Magdeburg, Aix la Chapelle, Posen, Potsdam, Halle, and Erfurt. The chief commercial ports are Königsberg, Dantzic, Stralsund, Memel, Stettin, and Elbing.

Government. The government is a hereditary monarchy. The king is assisted by a ministry or cabinet on a similar footing to that in England, but there is no representative assembly. There are four orders of knighthood; and the noblesse or gentry are numerous, comprising about 20,000 families.—In the eastern part, there are from 4 to 5,000,000 cerfs or peasants attached to the soil; in the western part, none.

Religion. The religion of the royal family is the Calvinist, but there is no limitation, and all denominations are tolerated, and are on an equal footing. In 1817, the Lutherans and Calvinists of Prussia and of some other parts of Germany, formed a union under the name of Evangelical Christians. The relative numbers have been stated as follows:—

Lutherans & Calvinists	6,600,000
Catholics	3,600,000
Jews	75,000
Anabaptists	14,000
Moravians	7,000
Unitarians, Pietists, &c.	4,000

Literature, &c. The universities are those of Berlin, Halle, Breslau, Königsberg, Bonn, and Griefswalde; and there are gymnasia at Berlin, Magdeburg, Schul-Pforte, Dantzic, Königsberg, Breslau, &c. Education is much more advanced in the north than in the south of Germany, and a considerable part of the Prussian states are well furnished with elementary schools, particularly Brandenburg, Saxony, and part of Prussia proper.—The common language is the German.

Revenue, &c. The annual revenue is about £7,000,000. There is no paper currency; all is paid in gold and silver. The national debt is computed at about £40,000,000.

Army. Prussia is famous for the military discipline of its army. The total number of troops under arms, in 1815, exceeded 200,000. They have been since somewhat reduced, but in 1820 exceeded 150,000.

Commerce. The commerce of Prussia, though conducted with some advantages, both maritime and inland, is in an early stage. The exports consist of linen, woollens, and hardware; corn, wool, timber, pitch, tar, potash, lintseed, tobacco, wax, cattle, horses, &c. The amount is stated at £7, or 8,000,000.

Manufactures. Prussia, though more an agricultural than a trading country, has districts of great activity in manufactures. Silesia and Westphalia have long been noted for their linens. Other manufactures are woollens, hardware, leather, earthen ware, glass, paper, tobacco, &c. Cotton works have lately been introduced; and brewing is a branch of great importance.

Rivers, &c. Prussia is a favoured country with regard to water communication in its interior. The Baltic forms a number of bays or rather lakes along its coast, as the Frische, Curische, Putzig, and Stettin Hafs; and there is a succession of navigable rivers, viz. the Niemen, Pregel, Vistula, Oder, Elbe, Weser, and Rhine. Some of the tributary streams are the Wartha, Neisse, Saale, Havel, Moselle, Roer, and Lippe. There are several useful canals; and small lakes are numerous.—The principal islands are Rugen and Usedom.

Face of the country. A level surface predominates throughout the Prussian states; the country abounds in marshes, lakes, and rivers of slow current. The great mountain tracts, the Hartz in Saxony, and the Riesengebirge, a branch of the Sudetic chain, in Silesia, are near the outskirts of Prussia.

Soil and Productions. The soil in some parts is good, but in general it is by no means fertile, being often sandy and covered with heath. The productions are wheat, oats, barley, potatoes, flax, hemp, hops, cattle, sheep, horses, &c. The mineral productions are iron, copper, lead, vitriol, alum, salt, coal, and especially amber. About 200 tons of amber are annually collected in Prussia.

Climate. The climate is cold and piercing in the winter; warm and pleasant in the summer; rainy in autumn. The western part has a milder climate than the eastern.

Prussia Proper, a great division of Prussia, having on one side the northern frontier of Poland, and the Baltic on the other; extending from east to west in an oblong form. Pop. stated in 1817, at 1,450,000; in 1818, by enumeration, 1,561,095. It forms 2 provinces, East and West Prussia, which were formerly divided by the Vistula, now by a line a few miles to the east of that river.

East Prussia, or Ducal Prussia, bounded NW. by the Baltic, NE. by Russia, SE. & S. by Poland, and W. by W. Prussia. Sq. m. 15,115. Pop. 870,000, about one third of Lithuanian origin, & two thirds descendants of Swiss, French, or German Protestants. It is divided into 2 governments, Königsberg and Gumbinnen. The latter is composed of the part of Lithuania, allotted to Prussia. Chief towns, Königsberg, Gumbinnen, Memel, and Tilsit. The climate is severe, the winters very cold, and the spring and autumn changeable, and frequently foggy. The soil is tolerably fertile, producing corn, potatoes, hemp, flax, hops, and madder. The most remarkable mineral is amber.

West Prussia, bounded N. by the Baltic, E. by East Prussia, S. by Poland and Posen, and W. by Brandenburg. Sq. m. 10,000. Pop. 580,000. It is divided into 2 governments, Dantzic and Marienwerder. Chief towns, Dantzic, Marienwerder, Elbing, Thorn, Marienburg, Grandentz, and Culm. Like East Prussia it abounds in lakes and forests, and its productions are similar.

Puna, isl. in the Pacific ocean, near the west coast of America, in the bay of Guayaquil, about 60 miles in circumference. It is very flat, low land. Puna is the capital, and indeed the only place on the island; situated at the head of the harbour, in NE. part of the island. It consists of about 50 houses and a small church. The houses are all built upon posts 10 or 12 feet high, with ladders on the outside to go up to them, because of the inundation to which the river of Guayaquil is very subject. They are thatched with palmetto leaves, and their chambers well boarded. According to an ancient tradition, the inhabitants of this island amounted to between 12,000 and 14,000; whereas at present they do not exceed 300, and consist chiefly of Casts and Spaniards, the Indians being very few. Pyramids, rocks in the E. Indian sea, near E. coast of the isl. of Mysol. Lon. 130. 59. E. Lat. 1. 55. S.

Pyramids, a range of ancient and stupendous Egyptian monuments, extending northwards from Cairo, but on the opposite or west side of the Nile. They are continued almost uninterruptedly for about 20 leagues, upon a plain occupying the lower slope of a ridge of hills, which runs parallel to the Nile. This plain is elevated about 80 feet above the ground inundated by the river, and consists of hard rock, forming a proper support for the immense weight of the structures erected upon it. The pyramids are distinguished by their form, which the name expresses, and still more by their great dimensions. The three largest are in the neighbourhood of the town of Gizeh, and are named from their founders. The following are their names and dimensions.

	Feet high.	Ft. sq. at base.
Cheops	499	693
Cephrenes	398	655
Mycerinus	162	280

The pyramids, at first view, present the appearance of solid masses; and it seems to have been the intention of the founders, that the few openings which they contain, should remain perpetually closed. The ingenuity of successive ages has traced the openings of the great pyramid, which were so studiously concealed. The exterior opening is 60 feet above the base, and leads into a passage 66 paces long. Beyond are successive galleries, one 120 feet, another 170, and another 180 feet long. The principal chamber, at the end of the longest gallery, is 36 feet long, 16 broad, and 18 high. At the farthest extremity is the sarcophagus, for the reception of which this enormous structure is supposed to have been reared. This pyramid is ascended on the outside by an uninterrupted flight of steps, from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 4 feet, diminishing in height, as they approach the top. The breadth is so proportioned to the height, that a line stretched from the top to the bottom would touch the angle of every step. The external part is built of square stones, cut in the rock found along the Nile. They are compacted together solely by their own weight, without lime, lead, or cramps of any metal. In the body of the pyramid, however, which is full of irregular stones, it has been necessary to employ a mortar composed of lime, earth, and clay. The pyramid of Cephrenes was first opened by M. Belzoni, in 1818. The sarcophagus was found to contain bones, supposed to be human, which appeared to confirm the belief, that these stupendous monuments, as had been asserted by Strabo and Diodorus, were intended as sepulchres of the kings of Egypt. But a thigh-bone, which was carried to London, and examined by the royal college of physicians, was pronounced to belong to a cow, whence it has been inferred, that these structures were reared in honour of this favourite object of Egyptian worship.

Pyrenees, range of mountains dividing France from Spain, extending, almost in a straight line, from St. Sebastian on the bay of Biscay, to Port Vendres on the Mediterranean, a distance of about 250 miles. From the principal chain proceed various inferior ridges. The acclivity of the Pyrenees on the side of Spain is often extremely steep, presenting a succession of rugged chasms, abrupt precipices, and huge masses of naked rock; on the side of France the ascent is more gradual. Like the Alps, they present a great variety of climate and production, & the same rapid transitions from sterility to luxuriant vegetation. They yield great quantities of timber. The mineral productions are iron, copper, lead, zinc, cobalt, and the precious metals.—Some of the highest summits are Mont Perdu, Vignemale, Maladetta, Pic Blanc, and Pic Long.

There are upwards of 50 passages for pedestrians, and 5 for carriages, over the mountains from one country to the other. The most frequented carriage roads are from Junqueira to Perpignan on the east; from St. Sebastian to St. Jean de Luz on the west; and from Pamplona to St. Jean de Pied de Port at some distance inland. The passes in the interior are over very high ground; that at Pineda being 8,248 feet above the sea.

Pyrenees, (Eastern,) dep. France, bounded N. by Arriege and Aude, E. by the Mediterranean, S. & W. by Spain; about 58 miles from E. to W., and from 18 to 25 from N. to S. It comprises the former provinces of Rousillon and Cerdagne, and part of Languedoc. The surface is mountainous; the soil, where well watered, is fertile, producing excellent fruits. It is divided into 3 arrondissements, Perpignan, the capital, Ceret, and Prades. Sq. m. 1,666. Pop. 126,626.

Pyrenees, (Lower,) dep. France, bounded N. by Landes and Gers, E. by Upper-Pyrenees, S. by Spain, and W. by the sea; 70 miles in length, and from 15 to 45 in breadth. It is composed of the provinces of Bearn, Navarre, and part of Gascony. The face of the country is mountainous and very romantic; watered by the Adour. It is divided into five arrondissements, Pau, the capital, Oleron, Mauleon, Bayonne, and Orthes. Sq. m. 3,116. Pop. 383,502.

Pyrenees, (Upper,) dep. France, bounded N. by Gers, E. by Upper-Garonne, S. by Spain, & W. by Lower-Pyrenees; 53 miles in length, and from 25 to 38 in breadth; a small district towards the N. is scarcely more than 7 miles in breadth. This department is composed chiefly of the province of Bigorre. It is very mountainous; in the elevated regions, stony and unproductive, but very fertile in the valleys. It is divided into 3 arrondissements, Tarbes, the capital, Bagneres de Bigorre, and Argelles. Sq. m. 1,793. Pop. 198,763.

Quebec, city, N. A. capital of Lower Canada, on a promontory, on NW. side of the St. Lawrence, 180 miles below Montreal, nearly 400 from the sea, 700 W. by N. Halifax. Lon. 71. 12. W. Lat. 46. 49. N. Pop. in 1818, 15,257; Catholics 11,991; Protestants 3,246. Catholics stated, in 1820, at 14,000. H. in 1818, 2,070. The promontory on which Quebec is built is formed by the rivers St. Lawrence and St. Charles, and is the termination of a ridge of land, generally from 1 to 2 miles wide, which runs from east to west. On the north it has the bold promontory of Cape Diamond, rising almost perpendicularly 345 feet above the water; and across it, at the NE., or lower end, the city is built. The fortifications extending across the peninsula, shut in the ground on which the city stands, the circuit of which is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. It is divided into 2 parts, Upper and Lower. The Upper town is situated on the side of Cape Diamond which slopes to the north, towards the river St. Charles. It is separated from the Lower town by a line of steep rocks, which run from the Cape to the west. The Lower town is situated immediately under Cape Diamond, on ground that may be termed artificial, as formerly, at flood tide, the water of the river used to wash the very foot of the rock. The streets run from the upper side of Cape Diamond down to the St. Charles, a distance of about half a mile; they are of considerable breadth, and the houses large and commodious; those next to the river have attached to them very extensive warehouses, and vessels come close to the wharfs to discharge their cargoes. The communication from the Lower to the Upper town is by a winding street, at the top of which is a fortified gate.

The Upper town is the seat of government and the principal residence of the military. The peculiar situation occasions great irregularity and unevenness in the streets. Many of them are narrow, but most of them are well paved; the breadth of the principal ones is 32 feet; others only from 24 to 27 feet. The houses are mostly built of stone, of very unequal height, with high sloping roofs. Great improvement has of late years taken place in the mode of building; and many of the houses are modern and very handsome. The principal public buildings are the castle of St. Louis, the Hotel Dieu, which includes a convent, hospital, &c.; the convent of Ursulines, the monastery of the Jesuits, now used for barracks; the Protestant and Catholic cathedrals, the Scots church, the Lower town church, the court house, the jail, the artillery barracks, the armory, and the French seminary or college, containing usually about 200 pupils. Some of the public buildings are spacious and elegant; but they do not add very much to the general appearance of the city. The castle of St. Louis, the governor's residence, is a handsome stone building of three stories, situated on the summit of a rock near the edge of a precipice, upwards of 200 feet high. The armory contains small arms in complete repair for the equipment of 20,000 men.

Quebec is esteemed the strongest town in America, and ranks as a fortress of the first consequence. The citadel, on the highest point of Cape Diamond, presents a formidable combination of powerful works, from whence a strong wall, supported by small batteries in different directions, runs to the edge of the precipice, with which other batteries are connected. The basin, or harbour of Quebec, is very beautiful, safe, and spacious, being sufficient to contain 100 sail of the line. The depth of water is 28 fathoms, with a tide rising 17 or 18 feet, and at the springs, from 23 to 24 feet. The river St. Lawrence, which is about 12 miles wide above the town, here contracts itself suddenly to the width of one mile. From this, according to some, is derived the name Quebec, which in the Algonquin language signifies contraction; others derive it from the Norman language, "Quel bec," "what a point!" The exports consist of grain, flour, timber, ashes, furs, &c. The annual value of the exports and imports amounts to about £1,000,000 sterling. In 1821, the number of vessels entered was 434, carrying 102,786 tons; value of imports $2,185,196.—Quebec was settled by the French in 1608. In 1759 it was taken by the English under general Wolfe, and ceded to them in 1763. In 1776, an unsuccessful attempt was made against the city by the Americans under general Montgomery, who was slain, together with about 700 men.

The scenery exhibited to the view from various parts of the Upper town is wonderfully picturesque, beautiful, and sublime. In the variegated expanse that is laid open before the spectator stupendous rocks, immense rivers, trackless forests, and cultivated plains; mountains, lakes, towns, and villages in turn strike the attention, and the senses are almost bewildered in contemplating the vastness of the scene.—"Quebec," says professor Silliman, "for an American city, is certainly a very peculiar town: a military town—most compactly and permanently built—stone its sole material—environed, as to its most important parts, by walls and gates—and defended by numerous heavy cannon—garrisoned by troops, having the arms, the costume, the music, the discipline of Europe—foreign in language, features, and origin, from most of those whom they are sent to defend—founded upon a rock, and in its highest parts overlooking a great extent of country—between three and four hundred miles from the ocean—in the midst of a great continent—and yet displaying fleets of foreign merchantmen, in its fine capacious bay—and shewing all the bustle of a crowded seaport—its streets narrow—populous and winding up and down almost mountainous declivities—situated in the latitude of the finest parts of Europe—exhibiting in its environs the beauty of a European capital—and yet in winter smarting with the cold of Siberia—governed by people of different language and habits from the mass of the population—opposed in religion, and yet leaving that population without taxes, and in the full enjoyment of every privilege, civil and religious; such are some of the important features which strike a stranger in the city of Quebec."

Queçala, t. Mexico, in Mechoacan; 105 SSE. St. Luis de Potosi.

Queda, city & s-p. on W. coast of the peninsula of Malacca; 300 ENE. Acheen. Lon. 100. 18. E. Lat. 6. 20. N. It is the capital of a kingdom, tributary to Siam, with a good harbour, situated at the mouth of a river, that will admit a vessel of 12 or 14 feet water on the springs over the bar, which is gravel and mud. The town contains about 400 houses, inhabited by Chinese and Malays. The environs are agreeable and fertile, the woods abound in elephants and other animals, and in some places are mines of lead, which supply large quantities of those metals for exportation to Hindoostan, Arabia, and Persia. At Queda there is a great plenty of rice, bullocks, buffaloes, and poultry; but not such abundance of fruit and vegetables as at Acheen. The territory of Queda is a flat country, favourable for the cultivation of rice; a hill north of the town and island, called the Elephant, favours the navigator's approach; also the small islands called Peers, 20 miles west of the bar, covered with trees, and good regular mud soundings, a great way off, even by night, indicate the distance to the mariner.

Quiloo, country and kingdom of Africa, situated near E. coast, near the mouth of the Coavo; about 180 miles from N. to S., but the extent inland towards the W. is unknown. The king and his subjects are Mahometans; the latter are partly black and partly tawny. They all speak the Arabic and several other languages, which they learn from the nations they traffic with.

Quiloo, supposed to be the ancient Rhapla, capital of the kingdom of the same name. Lat. 8. 35. S. It is situated on an island near the mouth of the Coavo, and is said to be large, rich, and well built. The houses are of stone and mortar, handsome, and after the Spanish manner. They are several stories high, and have each a pleasant garden behind, well watered and cultivated, here being plenty of springs of fresh water. The houses are finely furnished within, and terraces on the top, with a kind of hard clay, and the streets so narrow, that one may easily step from one side to the other. On one side of the town is the citadel, where resides the Mahometan prince. It is adorned with stately towers, and surrounded with a ditch, and other fortifications. It has 2 gates, one towards the port, whence one may see the ships sailing in and out; the other looking towards the land. Such was Quiloo many years since; but when visited by Capt. Beaver, in 1812, it retained no traces of its former splendour. The country about Quiloo, though low, is yet very pleasant and fertile in rice and millet, fruits, and good pasture. The climate is likewise affirmed by most travellers to be very temperate and healthy.

Quito, country, S. A., formerly independent ; afterwards attached to Peru ; since 1718, forming an audience of New Grenada ; bounded N. by Santa Fé and Popayan, E. by the Portuguese dominions, S. by Peru, and W. by the Pacific. Length from E. to W. 1,800 miles ; breadth from N. to S. 600. Pop. estimated, in 1822, at 550,000. It consists of 10 districts, San Miguel de Ibarra, Otabalo, Quito, Latacunga, Riobamba, Chimbo, Guayaquil, Cuenca, Quixos, & Loxa. In this immense extent, the population is chiefly confined to the valley, which is formed on the very ridge of the main chain of the Andes, by parallel summits, making a long series of small, narrow plains, extending from St. Miguel de Ibarra to Loxa, and to the country between those and Popayan, and from the western slope of the Cordillera to the ocean. The eastern parts are chiefly immense districts, thinly scattered with missionary villages.—The climate varies according to elevation ; the low plains have the heat of the torrid, and the elevated regions the cold of the frigid zone. The productions are various ; the champaigne country and deep ravines produce maize and sugar cane ; the elevated lands, wheat, barley, and other grains ; the mountain plains feed numerous flocks of sheep and herds of cattle. The commerce is mostly internal. No mines of importance are worked. The inhabitants consist mostly of Indians, some mestizoes, and a few Spaniards.

Quito, city, S. A., capital of the above country, situated on the eastern slope of the western branch of the equatorial Andes ; 35 leagues from the Pacific ocean. Lon. 78. 10. W. Lat. 0. 13. S. Pop. in 1802, 70,000 ; $\frac{1}{6}$ whites, $\frac{1}{3}$ mestizoes, $\frac{1}{6}$ Indians ; the other third different casts. Bp. see. Quito was rebuilt from the Indian town by Benalcazar, in 1534. It is situated on the skirt of the volcanic mountain Pichinca, and is elevated 9,514 feet above the sea. Owing to the inequalities of the ground, the streets are very irregular and uneven, and so numerous are the crevices of the mountain in the environs, that many of the houses are built on arches. The principal square is very spacious, and in the centre is an elegant fountain. On one side stands the cathedral, on the opposite the episcopal palace, on the third side is the town house, and on the fourth the palace of the audience. Four streets, terminating at the angles of the square, are straight, broad, handsome, and well paved; but at the distance of 300 or 400 yards, the inequalities of the ground commence, which are so great as to deprive the inhabitants of the use of wheel carriages. The other streets are irregular, crooked, and unpaved. The principal houses are very large, and have a balcony towards the street, but are of only one story. The materials used for building are unburnt bricks and clay. The city contains a cathedral, 7 parish churches, a university, a hospital, numerous convents, nunneries, &c.

Clay and hot water, vomited from the volcano, diffuse such fertility, that a constant succession of fruits, flowers, and leaves, appears during the whole year, and even on the same tree. Grain is reaped and sown at the same time. Quito is so happily situated, that neither the heat nor cold is troublesome, though the extremes of both may be felt in the neighbourhood. But what renders this equality still more delightful is, that it is constant throughout the year, the difference between the seasons being scarcely perceivable. The common clothing, the whole year round, is nothing but a mixture of silk and wool. The winds are healthy, and blow continually, but never with any violence. So that were it not for some disagreeable circumstances, this country might be considered as the most happy spot on the earth. But when these are known, all its beauties seem concealed under the cloud of disappointment; for here are dreadful tempests of thunder and lightning, and still more dreadful earthquakes, which often surprise the inhabitants in the midst of security. The whole morning, and generally till two in the afternoon, the weather is extremely delightful; a bright sun, with a serene and clear sky, are commonly seen; but afterwards the vapours begin to thicken, the whole atmosphere is filled with thick clouds, which bring on such shocking tempests of thunder and lightning, that all the neighbouring mountains tremble, and the city too often feels their dreadful effects. —The perennial beauty and pleasantness of the country round the city of Quito can hardly be equalled in any other part of the known world. The remarkable fertility of the soil is naturally productive of a great plenty of fruits and corn of various kinds, and at the same time renders them uncommonly good; and this is evident from the delicacy of the beef, veal, mutton, pork, and poultry, of Quito.

Rabat and Sallée are so near each other that they ought not to be separated. There has been formerly, and at intervals, a number of European factories at Rabat ; but the difficulty of navigating the river, the obstacles arising from the arbitrary power of the sovereign, and the disposition and prejudices of the Moors, have disgusted the Europeans. Rabat is, however, the most proper place for trade of any upon this coast, both for its vicinity to Europe, and the quantity of wool, leather, and wax it is capable of furnishing. The walls are near two miles round, and fortified by square towers. They enclose the castle, the town of Rabat, and a large space of ground, where Jacob Almansor built beautiful palaces, and laid out delightful gardens, watered by plentiful streams, which he brought from the neighbouring spring.

Ragusa, s-p. Aust. Dalmatia, and capital of a circle to which it gives name, formerly capital of a small republic; 90 SE. Spalatro, 110 S. Serajo, 248 NW. Saloniki. Lon. 18. 31. E. Lat. 42. 50. N. Pop. 10,000. Abp. see. It was founded in the 7th century by fugitives from Epidaurus, and called Epidaurus, Rausis, or Rausa, but at present is styled Pabrovica, by the Turks, and Dobronieh by the Slavonians. It is surrounded by a wall, flanked with old towers. The streets, except the principal one, are narrow. The town extends towards the sea, and is defended by Fort St. Lorenzo. Were the rock of Chiroma, which lies in the sea, and belonged to the Venetians, fortified, it might be considered as impregnable. The air is wholesome, but the soil barren. The circumjacent islands are all fertile, pleasant, well inhabited, and embellished with fine towns, stately palaces, and beautiful gardens. The city is very subject to earthquakes, from which it has suffered incredible damages, especially in the years 1634 and 1667, in the latter of which 6,000 men were destroyed.—Native, Boscovich. Pop. of the circle, 37,022. Sq. m. 602. The soil is generally fertile, and the climate good.

Rainy River, r. Illinois, which rises near the W. border of Indiana, flows WNW., and joins the Illinois, Lon. 88. 5. W. Lat. 41. 20. N.

Rainy Lake, lake, N. A., divided by an isthmus near the middle, into two parts. The W. part is called the Great Rainy Lake, the E. the Little Rainy Lake, being the least division. It is in general very shallow in its depth. The broadest part of it is not more than 20 m.; its length, including both, about 300 miles. In the W. part, the water is very clear and good, and some excellent fish are taken in it. A great many fowl resort here at the fall of the year. Moose deer are to be found in great plenty, and likewise the carraboo, whose skin, for breeches or gloves, exceeds by far any other to be met with in N. America. The land on the borders of this lake is esteemed in some places very good, but rather too thickly covered with wood. Here reside a considerable band of the Chippe-ways. Rainy lake river runs from the lake of the Woods into Rainy lake. It is about 120 long, and 12 or 15 rods broad.

Rangoon, or Rangon, formerly called Dagoon, city, Birmah, in Pegu; 600 SE. Calcutta. Lon. 96. 9. E. Lat. 16. 47. N. Pop. 30, or 40,000. It is the principal port of the Birman empire, situated on a branch of the Irrawaddy, or Ava, called the Rangoon river, 30 miles from the sea, and founded in the year 1755, by Alompra, king of Birmah, who had taken the country from the king of Pegu. It contains about 5,000 taxable houses in the city and suburbs; the inhabitants consist of a mixture of many nations, Malabars, Moguls, Persians, Parsees, Armenians, Portuguese, French, and English. The river is very commodious for building ships, and the forests of Birmah and Pegu yield plenty of teak wood, the most durable wood that is known, and the best adapted for the construction of ships. The spring tides rise 20 feet in perpendicular height; the banks are soft, and so flat that but little trouble is required in the formation of docks; and the Birmah shipwrights are excellent workmen. The chief exports are wax, ivory, and timber. It is the only port in the empire which the Birmanis allow Europeans to trade with or settle at. It is the residence of a mayoon or viceroy, and considered the second city of the empire.—The American Baptist missionary society have 2 missionaries here.

Florence, 155 N. Rome. Lon. 12. 11. E. Lat. 44. 25. N. Pop. 10,148. Abp. see. It is encircled by a mound, but is not a place of strength. The situation is pleasant, but the air is unhealthy, owing to the marshy nature of the ground. The streets are tolerably straight and broad, but gloomy, the houses of antiquated structure, and many of them ruinous, and the city has a deserted aspect. It contains a fine cathedral, 21 parish churches, and 17 convents. Its manufactures, chiefly of silk, are inconsiderable, but it has a great annual fair.

Ravenna is an ancient city, was the seat of the emperors Honorius and Theodoric, and formerly much larger than at present. It formerly stood on a bay of the Adriatic, and had a considerable port; but this is now filled up with mud, which has accumulated to such a degree, that the city, still occupying the same site, is 3 or 4 miles from the sea.—Pop. of the delegation 123,767.

Red River, or Natchitoches, r. N. A., which rises about 100 NE. Santa Fé, in Mexico, Lon. 105. W. Lat. 35. N., and after a very serpentine course of about 1,500 miles in Mexico, between Mexico and Arkansas, and through Louisiana, flows into the Mississippi, 240 miles above New Orleans, in Lon. 91. 48. W. Lat. 31. 15. N. The navigation of Red river is interrupted at a place called Rapide, 135 miles from its mouth, by a ledge of soft rock of the consistence of pipe clay, which extends across the river, but might be easily removed. No difficulty, however, is experienced at present, except in low water. A more formidable obstruction is found in those natural bridges, formed by the accumulation of drift wood, under which the current of this great river passes for several miles. They have remained unbroken for so long a period that they have acquired a soil and a growth of timber similar to the surrounding country.

Red River, r. North America. The eastern branch rises from Red lake, flows W. by N. about 150 miles, and is then joined by the west branch. It then changes its direction to E. of N., and after a course below its junction of about 180 miles, flows into lake Winnipeg. About 70 miles above the lake it is joined by the Assiniboine.

Red Sea, or Arabian Gulf, (an. Arabicus Sinus), an extensive gulf of the Indian ocean, dividing Arabia from the opposite coast of Africa, extending in a NW. direction from the straits of Babelmandel to the isthmus of Suez, where it approaches to within 60 miles of the Mediterranean. Lat. 12. to 30. N. Length about 1,400 miles; breadth, where greatest, about 200. This sea was anciently a greater channel of commerce than in modern times. Its navigation is rendered difficult by frequent obstructions from coral rocks either above or under water, by storms, and by the paucity of safe harbours. The principal harbours are Suez, at its head; Cosseir, Suakem, and Massuah on west side; Jidda, Jambo, Ghunfude, Loheia, Hodeida, and Mocha on the east side.

Rhine, (an. Rhenus,) the greatest river in Europe after the Volga and Danube. It rises in the Grison Alps, in three branches that unite into one stream. The principal branch descends from the mountain of St. Gothard, and runs into the lake of Constance, near Rheineck; passing through the lake of Constance and Zell, it passes by, or near to Stein, Schaffhausen, Eglisau, Keiserstuhl, Seckingen, Rheinfelden, Bâle, Hunningue, Strasburg, Spire, Worms, Oppenheim, Bingen, Mentz, St. Goar, Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, Zons, Nuys, Dusseldorf, Duisburg, Rees, Emmeric, a little below which a large branch separates to the left, and takes the name of Wahal; to Huissen and Arnheim, near which another branch, which joins the Issel, breaks off to the right. The stream, which still keeps the name of the Rhine, passes on to Wageningen, and Wyck le Duerstede, where it again divides; the larger part to the left takes the name of the Leck, and joins the Meuse; the smaller, which is the less, passes by Utrecht, Voerden, Leyden, &c., and loses itself at last in the sand, just before it reaches the German sea, a few miles after it has left Leyden. It becomes navigable at Schaffhausen; at Cologne the vessels are from 100 to 150 tons. It receives the Neckar at Mannheim, the Maine at Mentz, the Moselle at Coblenz, &c. Length 700 miles.

Rhine, r. Brandenburg, which runs into the Havel, 10 miles above Havelburg.

Rhine, r. France, which runs into the Loire, near Roanne.

Rhine, (circle of the Lower,) one of the 10 circles into which the German empire was divided till 1806; bounded by the circles of Westphalia, Upper Rhine, Franconia, and Swabia; by Luxemburg and France. The princes who had the most considerable possessions here, were the electors of Mentz, Treves, and Cologne, and the elector palatine. It is now divided among the states of Baden, Bavaria, Hesse-Darmstadt, Nassau, Prussia, and Hanover.

Rhine, (circle of the Upper,) another of the divisions of Germany, abolished in 1806; bounded by the circles of the Lower Rhine, Westphalia, Upper and Lower Saxony, Swabia & Franconia, and France. It was divided into numerous parts, bishoprics, palatinates, margravates, provostships, &c. It is now distributed among Bavaria, Hesse-Cassel, Hesse-Darmstadt, Nassau, and other states.—Sq. miles of the two circles, about 20,000.

Rhine, (circle of the,) pr. Bavaria, separated and at considerable distance from the rest of the kingdom, on W. side of the Rhine; bounded N. by Hesse-Darmstadt, E. by the Rhine, S. by France, and W. chiefly by the Pru. government of Treves. Pop. 308,000. Sq. m. 1,808. It is divided into 4 districts, Frankenthal, Landau, Kaiserslautern, and Deux Ponts. It consists of a tract included in the late circle of the Upper Rhine; being intersected by branches of the Vosges, its surface is uneven, and its scenery often wild and beautifully varied. Chief town, Spire.

Rhine, pr. Hesse-Darmstadt, bounded N. & E. by the Rhine, S. by the Bavarian circle of the Rhine, and W. by the Prussian province of the Lower Rhine. Pop. 155,233. Sq. m. 1,022. Chief town, Mentz. It is divided into 10 cantons, Mentz, Upper Niederholm, Ingelheim, Bingen, Wilstein, Worstadt, Oppenheim, Bechtheim, Alzey, and Worms. The surface is hilly and romantic, being intersected by branches of the Vosges and Mont Tonnere. The valleys and small plains are very fertile, producing corn, flax, tobacco, vines, &c.

Rhine, Lower, (grand duchy of,) pr. Prussian states, composed of territories taken in 1814 from France and the grand duchy of Berg, and assigned to Prussia by the congress of Vienna; bounded N. by Juliers-Cleves-Berg, E. by Nassau and Hesse-Darmstadt, S. by France, and W. by the Netherlands. Pop. 971,597. Sq. m. 6,423. It is divided into 3 governments, viz. Aix la Chapelle, Coblenz, and Treves, each named from its chief town. The capital of the whole is Aix la Chapelle. The country is generally hilly, but has extensive valleys, yet there is no great extent of fertile soil. The lower ranks subsist in great measure upon potatoes, corn being but partially cultivated; other products are hops, tobacco, flax, wine, potash, &c. The rivers are the Rhine, Moselle, Aar, Erft, Lahn, Sieg, Boer, and Nette. The great majority of the inhabitants are Catholics, and are in general poor and ignorant.

Rhine, (Lower,) dep. France, bounded N. by Germany and dep. Moselle, E. by the Rhine, S. by Lower Rhine, and W. by Vosges, Meurte, and Moselle; 70 miles in length from N. to S., and 22 in its mean breadth. This department was, before the revolution, the northern part of Alsace. It is divided into 4 arrondissements; Strasburg the capital, Saverne, Weisseburg, and Schelestadt. It is one of the most fertile and best cultivated departments of France. Sq. m. 1,865. Pop. 239,200. Lutherans 160,000. Calvinists 25,000.

Rhine, (Upper,) dep. France, bounded N. by Lower Rhine, S. by Switzerland, and W. by Upper Saone and Vosges; about 50 miles from N. to S., and 27 from E. to W. Before the revolution it was the S. part of Alsace. It is pleasant, fertile, and well cultivated. It is divided into 3 arrondissements, Colmar, the capital, Befort, and Altkirch. Sq. m. 1,631. P. 336,940. Lutherans 40,000. Calvinists 11,000. Jews 10,000 Mennonists 3,180.

Rhine, (Confederation of the,) an association of princes, for the security of Southern Germany, formed in 1806, under the protection of the emperor of France. The number of inhabitants under the several princes, that originally entered into this alliance, was 7,034,500. The most important of these states were the kingdoms of Bavaria and Wurtemberg, and the Grand Duchy of Baden. Afterwards the kingdoms of Saxony and Westphalia, and various smaller states were annexed; and the whole population of the countries included under the Confederation, in 1811, was 12,361,400. This alliance was abolished in 1814.

TOPOGRAPHICAL TABLE.

Cos.	Towns.	Pop.	Chief towns.
Bristol	3	5,637	Bristol
Kent	4	10,228	E. Greenwich

Newport	7	15,771	NEWPORT
Providence	10	35,786	PROVIDENCE
Washington	7	15,687	S. Kingston
	31	83,059

Towns. The most considerable towns are Providence, Newport, Bristol, Warren, South Kingston, East Greenwich, Smithfield, and the villages of Pawtucket, and Pawtuxet. The principal harbours are Newport, Providence, Wickford, Pawtuxet, Bristol, and Warren.

Education. Brown university is established at Providence; also a large Friends' boarding school. There are 8 academies in the state. Public and private schools are supported in a in various places. The whole number of primary schools is upwards of 250. Public schools, however, are not supported by law in Rhode Island, as in the other New England states.

Religion. The number of congregations of the several denominations of Christians in this state is as follows; Baptists 57; Friends 18; Congregationalists 11; Episcopalians 6; Moravians 1; Jews 1.

Government. The legislature is composed of a senate of 12, including the governor and lieutenant governor, all chosen annually, and a house of representatives, consisting of 72 members, chosen twice a year; viz. on the 3d Wednesday in April, and on the 4th Tuesday in August. Judges and other civil officers, and also military officers are appointed yearly. The legislature meets at Newport twice a year, at Providence once, and once a year alternately at East Greenwich and South Kingston.

Rivers, bay and islands. The rivers are Pawtucket, Providence, Pawtuxet, Pawcatuck, and Wood river. Narraganset bay extends up from S. to N. between the mainland on the E. and W., and embosoms many pleasant and fertile islands; among which are Rhode Island, from which the state derives its name, Conanicut, Prudence, Patience, Hope, Dyer's, and Hog islands. Block island, off the coast in the Atlantic, is the most southerly land belonging to the state.

Face of the country, soil, &c. The face of the country is mostly level, except in the north-west part, which is hilly and rocky. The soil is generally better adapted to grazing than tillage. A large proportion of the western and northwestern part of the state has a thin and lean soil; but the islands and the country bordering on Narraganset bay, are of great fertility, and are celebrated for their fine cattle, their numerous flocks of sheep, and the abundance and excellence of their butter and cheese. Here are found some of the finest cattle in New England. Cider is made for exportation. Corn, rye, barley, oats, and in some places wheat are produced in sufficient quantities for home consumption; and the various kinds of grasses, fruits, culinary roots and plants in great abundance and perfection. The rivers and bays swarm with a variety of excellent fish.

Minerals. Iron ore is found in large quantities in several parts, and some copper; there is also an abundance of limestone, particularly in the county of Providence.

Exports. The exports consist chiefly of flaxseed, lumber, horses, cattle, beef, pork, fish, poultry, onions, butter, cheese, barley, grain, spirits, and cotton and linen goods. They amounted, in 1816, to 612,794 dollars.

Climate. The climate of this state is as healthy as that of any part of America; and it is more temperate than the climate of any of the other New England states, particularly on the islands, where the breezes from the sea have the effect not only to mitigate the heat in summer, but to moderate the cold in winter. The summers are delightful, especially on the island of Rhode Island.

Rhode Island, Indian name Aquedneck, or Aquidnick, isl. from which the state takes its name, situated in Narraganset bay. Lon. 71. 20. W. Lat. 41. 25. N. It is about 15 miles from N. to S., and $3\frac{1}{2}$ wide, and is divided into 3 townships, Newport, Portsmouth, and Middletown. It is a noted resort for invalids from southern climates. The island is exceedingly pleasant and healthful. Travellers, with propriety call it the Eden of America. It suffered much by the revolutionary war. Some of its most ornamental country seats were destroyed; and the fine groves, orchards, and fruit trees, wantonly cut down. The soil is of a superior quality. Between 30, and 40,000 sheep are fed on the isl.; besides neat cattle and horses. There is a valuable coal mine on NW. part of the island.

Rhode River, r. S. Carolina, which runs into the NW. branch of Cape Fear river.

Rhoden, t. Ger., in Waldeck; 20 SSE. Paderborn, 24 NNW. Waldeck.

Rhodes, isl. in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Natolia, much celebrated in ancient history. The island was formerly known by the names of Ophiusa, Asteria, Jethraea, Trinacria, Corymbia, Poessa, Atabyria, Macria, Oloessa, Stadia, Telchinis, Pelagia, and Rhodus. It lies in the Mediterranean, over against the coast of Natolia, from which it is distant about 20 miles. This island is about 120 miles in compass, and blessed with a most fruitful soil, which gave occasion to the fable of those golden showers that were once said to have fallen upon it. It formerly produced in great plenty all sorts of delicious fruits, and wines of so exquisite a taste, that they were used by the Romans chiefly in their sacrifices; and thought, as Virgil informs us, too good for mortals. The air here is said to be so serene that no day ever passes without sunshine; whence the poets feigned Phœbus to be in love with this island.

A pacha is the governor-general of the island: he possesses absolute power. The soil of Rhodes is dry and sandy; but the numerous springs which water it render it extremely fertile. Corn thrives there admirably. Its yellow and heavy grain affords a flour as white as snow, which makes excellent bread. If half of the country capable of yielding it, were cultivated, the Rhodians would have far more than sufficient for their consumption, and might export to foreign countries. The number of families in the whole island was estimated, by Savary, at 4,700 Turks, 2,500 Greeks, and 100 Jews; in all 7,300, or about 36,500 inhabitants; a small population for an island 40 leagues in circumference. Pop., according to Turner, only 20,000; Greeks 14,000. Mr. Connor states the Greek population, in 1820, at about 18,000. Jews 1,000. Lon. 27. 32. E. Lat. 36. 18. N.

Rhodes, city, Asia, capital of the island of Rhodes. Lon. 28. 30. E. Lat. 36. 25. N. Pop. 10,000, of whom 4,000 are Greeks. Greek abp. see. It was built by Hippodamus, and is 9 m. in circumference: "the beauty of its harbour," says Strabo, "of its streets and walls, and the magnificence of its monuments, render it so much superior to all other cities, as to admit of no comparison." The celebrated Colossus of Rhodes, a brazen statue of Apollo, dedicated to the sun, and reckoned one of the seven wonders of the world, was the work of Chares of Lindus, a pupil of Lysippus, and was 105 feet high; it was thrown down by an earthquake, 56 years after it was first erected, and 224 B. C. Its feet stood upon two moles which formed an entrance of the harbour, and ships passed in full sail between its legs. It lay neglected 894 years after it was thrown down. It was then sold to a Jewish merchant. The metal weighed 720,000 pounds. It is said to have cost 300 talents. The arts flourished greatly in this renowned city. Their schools, too, attained so high a degree of celebrity, that they were resorted to by some of the greatest men in Rome; among whom were Marcus Brutus, Cicero, Cato, Cassius, Cæsar, and Pompey.

The modern town, built on the ruins of the ancient city, occupies only a quarter of its extent, and possesses no remarkable antiquities. Not even the smallest remains of the theatre, temples, and portico, are to be discovered. Statues, colossuses, paintings, have all been destroyed, or carried off. To wide and skillfully disposed streets, to those regularly ranged edifices, where each front presented the same order of architecture, have succeeded narrow and winding lanes, and houses without taste, regularity, or decoration. Rhodes has only 2 harbours; the smallest faces the E. and is called Darca; the other is large, and bears the name of Rhodes.

Rhodes, t. Africa, in Tunis, situated on an eminence, between the lake of Tunis and the sea, at a distance from some hills, where Hanno was defeated by Regulus.

Rhodesz, or Rodez, (an. Segodunum, and Ruteni.) city, France, capital of Aveiron; 32 NNE. Alby, 273 S. Paris. Lon. 2. 34. E. Lat. 44. 21. N. Pop. 6,416. Bp. see. It contains a cathedral, 8 churches, a hospital, a public library, and a royal college or lycee, and has some manufactures.

Richmond, co. Va., bounded N. by Westmoreland co., NE. by Westmoreland and Northumberland cos., SE. by Lancaster co., and SW. by the Rappahannock, W. 122. Pop. in 1810, 6,214; slaves 3,178. Pop. in 1820, 5,706.

Richmond, city, port of entry, & metropolis of Virginia, in Henrico co., on N. side of James river, between 50 and 60 miles, by the course of the river, above City Point, and 150 miles from its mouth, immediately below the Falls, at the head of tide water, and opposite to Manchester, with which it is connected by 2 bridges; 25 N. Petersburg, 123 S. by W. Washington. Lon. 77. 31. W. Lat. 37. 30. N. Pop. in 1800, 5,537; in 1810, 9,735; in 1817, 14,338; in 1820, 12,046. The city was formerly divided into 2 sections, the upper or western part, called Shockoe hill, and the lower part, Richmond, separated by Shockoe creek, a small rivulet; but these distinctions are now going out of use, and the sections are united together. The situation is highly picturesque, beautiful, and healthy; and Richmond is a flourishing, wealthy, and commercial city.

It contains about 800 houses built of brick, many of them elegant, and about 600 built of wood; a glass house, a sugar refinery, an iron foundry, a rolling and slitting mill, a cotton manufactory, 8 tobacco ware houses, 2 insurance offices, 3 banks, including a branch of the United States bank, a capitol or state house, a house for the governor, an armory, a penitentiary, a court house, a jail, an almshouse, 2 market houses, a public library, containing about 3,000 volumes, a museum, a Lancasterian school, and 8 houses of public worship; 2 for Episcopalians, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Baptists, 2 for Methodists, 1 for Friends, & a Jews' synagogue.

The falls extend nearly 6 miles, in which distance the river descends 80 feet. A canal with 3 locks is cut on the N. side of the river, terminating at the town in a basin of about 2 acres. Few cities, situated so far from the sea, possess better commercial advantages than Richmond, being at the head of tide water, on a river navigable for batteaux 220 miles above the city, and having an extensive and fertile back country, abundant in the production of tobacco, wheat, corn, hemp, coal, &c. It has an extensive inland trade, and its foreign commerce is considerable. The shipping owned here, in 1816, amounted to 9,943 tons. James river is navigable to Warwick, for vessels drawing 15 or 16 feet water, and to Rockets, just below Richmond, for vessels drawing 10 feet. The exports of the city consist of tobacco, flour, coal, and various articles of produce.—There are 5 newspapers published in this city; 2 daily, 1 three times a week, and 2 twice a week.

The Virginia armory is an extensive establishment, and there are annually manufactured in it upwards of 4,000 stands of arms, 300 rifles, and 1,000 cavalry swords and pistols. The penitentiary is under good regulations, and contained, in 1818, 170 prisoners. The new court house is a very spacious and elegant edifice. The capitol is built on a commanding situation on Shockoe hill, and is a very conspicuous object to the surrounding country. The design was taken from La Maison Quarée, at Nismes, and the model was obtained by Mr. Jefferson, while minister there. The edifice, however, falls greatly short of the model.

In 1811, on the 26th of December, the theatre at Richmond took fire during an exhibition, and in the conflagration 72 persons lost their lives, among whom were George William Smith Esq. governor of the state, and other persons of respectability. An elegant Episcopal church of brick, styled the Monumental Church, has since been erected on the spot, with a monument in front, commemorative of the melancholy event.

Richmond, v. Eng., in Surry, situated on the side of the Thames; 9 WSW. London. Lon. 0. 19. W. Lat. 51. 28. N. Pop. 5,219. H. 875. The manor was anciently called Shene or Sheen. The spot is greatly celebrated for its beauty, and for its being the seat of a royal palace during several centuries. The palace is now demolished; but the great park is kept in its proper state, and well stocked with deer: it is inclosed by a brick wall, 8 miles in compass. The rich scenery of Richmond has been the theme of general admiration, and has attracted a number of families of distinction, whose seats render the village and neighbourhood remarkably gay and splendid. The village extends about a mile up the hill from the Thames, and is skirted and intermingled with gardens. The view from Richmond hill is much celebrated. In the palace here Edward I., II., and III. resided. Henry VII. died here, and here also his grand-daughter, queen Elizabeth, breathed her last.

Riga, city, Eu. Russia, capital of Livonia, or government of Riga, on the Dwina, or Duna, 7 miles above its entrance into the gulf of Livonia, or Riga; 160 NE. Königsberg, 210 SSE. Stockholm, 250 WSW. St. Petersburg. Lon. 24. 8. E. Lat. 56. 56. N. Pop. 36,000. Till the rapid increase of Odessa, Riga was the 2d commercial town in the Russian empire. It has a safe and capacious port, and though not a regular fortress, it is a place of considerable strength, being surrounded by an earthen mound and moat, having also a citadel.

It contains 8 Greek churches, 6 Lutheran, 1 Catholic, 1 Reformed, an arsenal, exchange, hospital, lyceum, gymnasium, public library, cabinet of natural history, &c. The houses are generally of stone, some of them neat, but the streets are narrow and crooked, and the city not handsome. Its situation on a plain exposes it to frequent inundations.—The shipping in the river, and the bustle in the streets, indicate commercial activity. The exports consist of timber, flax, hemp, and corn, all brought from a distance by water communication. The export trade is chiefly in the hands of English and Scotch houses. The number of vessels arriving yearly at Riga, is between 700 and 800.—The gulf of Riga or Livonia was anciently the Cylius Sinus.

Lon. 12. 33. E. Lat. 44. 4. N. Pop. 8,074. Bp. see. It is a very ancient town, once much larger than at present, and formerly had a good harbour, but the sea is now retired to the distance of $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile. It is situated on a plain, open to the Adriatic, and bounded on the other side by a range of hills. The town is extensive, has straight streets with several squares, and a number of handsome churches and convents, but it has a dull and deserted appearance. It contains some interesting old Roman remains. At the entrance, on the side of the Pesaro, stands a triumphal arch of Augustus, adorned with Corinthian columns, and said to be the best preserved extant.

Rio de Janeiro, pr. or captania, Brazil, which has its name from the river Janeiro, that runs through the middle of it; bounded N. by Espi-ritu Santo, E. & S. by the Atlantic, and W. by Minas Geraes. The country is mountainous, well wooded and watered; the climate excellent; the soil extremely fertile, producing sugar in great abundance, and abounding in the richest pasture; but the cultivation greatly neglected; the inhabitants poor and indolent, and intent on making their fortunes by hunting after gold and silver, to the neglect of agriculture. There are gold workings in different parts, principally on the banks of the rivers.

Rio de Janeiro, city, S. A., capital of Brazil and of a province of the same name, on a river of the same name, at the head of a large bay. Lon. 43. 18. W. Lat. 22. 54. S. Pop. variously estimated; by some, below 100,000; by Mawe, at 100,000; by Ellis, at 120,000; and by a visiter from Massachusetts in 1819, at upwards of 200,000. About two-thirds of the inhabitants are slaves. The city stands on a plain close to the shore, on the west side of the bay, at the foot of several high mountains, which rise behind it. The citadel, called St. Sebastian, stands on the top of a hill that commands the town. The streets are generally straight, well paved, and have foot paths, but are for the most part extremely dirty. Most of them are terminated by a chapel, whither the people flock every evening to offer up their devotions. The houses are generally built of stone or brick, two stories high; they were formerly furnished with latticed balconies, which had a heavy appearance, and obstructed the circulation of the air; these have been removed. The cathedral is in a superior style of architecture. The most of the state and splendour that belongs to the city, is to be found in the churches, some of which are well built; they are loaded with ornaments, not generally executed in good taste. There is said to be more religious parade in this city than in any Catholic city in Europe; there being a procession in some parish every day, with various insignia, splendid and costly in a high degree. The state of morals and education is extremely low. There were, a few years since, no public schools, or colleges, or literary societies, but a few indifferent booksellers' shops, but 1 printing press, and 1 newspaper. The state of manners is very free and unrestrained. All classes display an unbounded propensity to mirth and pleasure; nor do their religious ceremonies impart to their manners any portion of gloom or austerity. Operas, plays, and masquerades, are in great repute. There is a public garden, situated on the sea shore, laid out in grass plots, shrubberies, and parterres, and is much frequented.

Rio de Janeiro was the residence of the royal family of Portugal from 1807 to 1821. The royal palace skirts the beach, and is seen to great advantage from the landing place. The king's library, consisting of 70,000 volumes, was opened to the public.—Good water for the use of the inhabitants, is conveyed from the neighbouring hills by means of aqueducts. The public inns are destitute of accommodation and comfort. House rent is as high as in London. Provisions are plentiful, but not of the best quality.—The harbour is one of the finest in the world; spacious and secure; and easy of access, as there is a daily alternation of sea and land breeze. The entrance is about a mile wide, and is intersected in every direction with heavy batteries. The city is the chief mart of Brazil. The exports consist of gold, diamonds, topazes, and other precious stones, cotton, sugar, rum, ship timber, fine cabinet woods, hides, tallow, indigo, and coarse cotton cloths. The trade is carried on between this city and the mining districts in the interior, by innumerable troops of mules. Their common burden is about 3 cwt. each, which they carry to the almost incredible distance of 1,500 or 2,000 miles. The principal articles which they carry to the mining districts, are salt and iron. Within a few years the city has been improved and extended by the erection of public and private buildings, and its commerce increased.—Fahrenheit's thermometer usually stands between 70° and 86°.

Riobamba, t. S. A., cap. of a jurisdiction, in New Grenada, and audience of Quito; 90 S. Quito. Lon. 78. 48. W. Lat. 1. 42. S. P. in 1802, 20,000. It is situated at the extremity of an extensive valley, at the foot of a mountain, and opposite to the snowy mountain of Chimborazo, which renders the temperature cold, but healthy. The town is large and handsome, the streets wide and straight, the buildings of stone and mortar, but are low on account of earthquakes. It has manufactures of cloths, baizes, and particularly stockings. This town has been twice (in the years 1698 and 1746) almost ruined by the eruptions of the volcano of Cotopaxi.

Ripen, or Rypen, or Ribe, s-p. Denmark, in North Jutland, on the Gram; 77 S. Viborg, 108 N. Hamburg. Lon. 8. 47. E. Lat. 55. 20. N. Pop. 2,000. It is the sea of a bishop, and capital of the diocess. Ripen was formerly one of the most celebrated and flourishing cities in the N.; it had 4 parish churches and 5 chapels, besides the cathedral, 4 convents, with their churches, a strong castle, and between 600 and 700 free burghers. But an end was put to all its grandeur and opulence, partly by several conflagrations, (particularly a dreadful fire in 1580,) and partly by inundations, and the ravages of war. The merchants' old exchange is now converted into a town-house. Here is still some little trade carried on in grain, horned cattle, horses, &c. but the shallowness of the river will admit of none but small vessels to come up to the city, and these only at high water.

Roanoke, r. N. C., which is formed by the union of the Staunton and the Dan, the former of which rises in Virginia, and the latter in N. C., and flows into Albemarle sound, Lon. 76. 56. W. Lat. 35. 58. N. It is navigable for vessels of considerable burden 30 or 40 miles, and for boats of 30 or 40 tons to the falls, 70 miles, and for boats of 5 tons for the distance of 200 miles above the falls.

The country watered by this river is extremely fertile. Below the falls towards the mouth, vast quantities of Indian corn are raised; and the planters are among the wealthiest in the state. Improvements have lately been made in the navigation of this river by constructing canals around the falls; opening a water communication between Norfolk, Va., and the interior of N. C., and the southern part of Virginia. See Dan and Danville.

Pop. 9,070, and including the adjoining town of Chatham, 21,722. H. 3,838. The Romans had a station here, and it is probable a fortress, on which a castle was afterwards built. Rochester was erected into a bishopric in the beginning of the 7th century, and a church was built by king Ethelbert for Justus, the first bishop. It was very early encompassed by a wall, which is yet entire in some places, but none of the gates are standing. The city consists chiefly of one main street, which is spacious, well paved, and lighted with gas; inhabited generally by gentry, clergy, tradesmen, and innkeepers; no sort of manufactures or business of consequence being carried on here. It contains a hospital, a grammar school, and an almshouse. Besides the cathedral, there is one other parish church. There is a weekly market on Friday, and a market for cattle the last Tuesday in every month. The city sends 2 members to parliament.

This city, anciently the capital of the Roman empire, the mistress of the world, and the seat of arts and arms, in later times the residence of the pope, and the centre of ecclesiastical power and tyranny, was founded by Romulus, in the year 752 before Christ, built on 7 hills, Palatinus, Capitolinus, Aventinus, Janiculus, Cœlius, Esquilinus, and Quirinalis. Though in its origin it was one of the most humble of cities, yet it was destined to become the capital of the largest empire of antiquity. No city can compare with it in regard to its fame, the extent and duration of its power, the singularity of its historical events, and the magnificence of its edifices and antiquities. In the time of Trajan, when the dominions of the Roman empire were the most extensive, the city is said to have been 50 miles in circuit, and to have contained 6,800,000 inhabitants. This is, however, thought to be a great exaggeration. The returns mentioned in Roman history are to be understood not of the inhabitants of the city, but of persons possessing the privileges of Roman citizens.

There were no less than 420 temples, crowded with statues ; the priests were numerous, and each divinity had a particular college of sacerdotal servants. It now contains numerous monuments of the ancients, such as baths, obelisks, amphitheatres, circuses, columns, mausoleums, aqueducts, fountains, catacombs, pagan temples, and a vast number of statues.

The space inclosed by walls, approaches to the form of a square, of a little upwards of 3 miles on a side, the walls being about 13 miles in circuit. The 7 eminences on which the ancient city was built, are now covered with vineyards, cornfields, or villas, the close population being confined to the level tract between the eminences and the river. The length of this part is less than 2 miles, and its breadth from 1 to $1\frac{1}{2}$. It possesses many features of the ancient city. The same roads lead to the gates ; the same aqueducts pour the same streams into the fountains ; the same great churches that received the masters of the world under the emperors, are still open to their descendants ; and the same venerable walls that enclosed so many temples and palaces in the reign of Aurelian, still exist. The streets are paved, narrower than those in London, and wider than those in Paris. The houses are low, built of stone and brick, but plastered or stuccoed, as at Vienna, Berlin, &c. The gates, for the most part, are triumphal arches. The number of monasteries in 1819, was 37, containing 1,236 monks ; of nunneries, 40, containing 1,463 nuns. Many of the religious institutions were suppressed by Bonaparte. The city contains 46 squares, 20 gates, 5 monumental pillars, 10 obelisks, 13 fountains, 22 mausoleums, 30 hospitals, and 346 churches.

The wall that surrounded Rome in the time of the emperors, is in many places in good preservation, and forms part of the present boundary between the town and country. The squares are small ; they are in general adorned with obelisks, fountains, and other monuments. Among the ancient edifices, is conspicuous the Pantheon, or Rotonda, originally dedicated to all the gods, now a Christian temple, dedicated to all the saints by Gregory IV. It is distinguished for its solidity, and the beauty of its proportions, and is the most perfect of the Roman temples now remaining. It is 200 palms in height, and 218 in diameter, with a spacious dome receiving the light from one great aperture in the middle. It was built in the reign of Augustus, and is called Rotonda, from its circular form. A still more imposing object is the Coliseum, or amphitheatre of Vespasian, constructed for the combats of gladiators and public spectacles, a structure of oval form, 581 feet in length, 481 in breadth, 1,616 in circumference, being the largest amphitheatre ever known. About half of its external circuit still remains, and it is the most stupendous monument of antiquity in Rome. Of the triumphal arches of ancient Rome, the only one remaining entire, is the arch of Constantine, with its pillars, statues, and bas reliefs, all of the finest marble. Trajan's pillar, one of the most remarkable of the ancient monuments, is of marble, with a diameter of 11 feet at the base, 10 at the top ; its height, 133 feet. It is still covered with admirable bas reliefs, containing 2,500 figures of men, besides a number of elephants, horses, and trophies. It represents the expedition of Trajan against the Dacians. Of the ancient aqueducts, only three remain.

No city in Europe is superior to Rome in the number and magnificence of its churches. The most remarkable are St. Peter's, the Pantheon, and the 7 patriarchal basilicæ, or cathedrals, all distinguished for their architecture. The cathedral church of St. Peter is the chef d'œuvre of Italy, the largest and most beautiful church in the world, and in magnitude of outlines and variety of parts, far exceeds any of the edifices constructed by the Greeks or the Romans. It is 720 feet long, 510 broad, and 500 high, from the pavement to the top of the cross. It was projected by pope Nicholas V.; Julius II. laid the first stone in 1506; but it was not finished till 1621. The most celebrated architects, Bramante, Raphael, Michael Angelo, Vignola, Maderno, and Bernini, have displayed their talents in this great work; and no less than 18 successive popes were employed in its construction. The total expense has been estimated at £12,000,000 sterling. The hall is the most spacious ever constructed by human art, extending upwards of 600 feet in length. But of all objects of this admirable edifice, the most surprising is the dome, the vault of which rises to the height of 400 feet, and extends over the spectator like a firmament.

The 3 palaces of the pope are the Lateran, Quirini, and Vatican. The Lateran is of great extent, but the main body of the building has been long converted into a hospital for orphans. The Quirinal palace, from its height and salubrity, is become the summer residence of the popes. The Vatican, situated on an eminence near St. Peter's, is a vast irregular pile of building, erected by different architects at different eras, and forming not one, but an assemblage of edifices. It is of immense extent, and the number of its rooms, great and small, is estimated at 10,000. The library is composed of the ancient collections of the popes and several princes, and is one of the largest in the world; though it contains very few books published within the last 50 years. "The number of volumes," says Eustace, "has never been accurately stated; some confine it to 200,000, others raise it to 400,000, and many swell it to 1,000,000. The mean is probably the most correct." The number of MSS. is stated at 50,000.—There are several other extensive libraries in the city; that of the Barberini contains 60,000 printed volumes, and several thousand MSS. Rome contains a university, a Greek, a German, and a Jesuit college. The Propaganda, or college for the diffusion of the Christian faith, is on an extensive scale, containing youths from different nations, and a press for printing books in more than thirty different languages. There is one monthly and one weekly literary publication here, and one newspaper, the only one in the States of the Church: but the fame of modern Rome lies not in literature, but in the fine arts. The family mansions, or as they are termed, palaces, are numerous, and the size and height of many of them, their spacious courts and por-ticoes, their halls and lofty apartments, with the pillars, marbles, statues, and the paintings, place them on a level with the royal residences, in the north of Europe. The Tiber at Rome is deep, but only about 200 feet wide, and its water is of a dingy yellow. It is crossed at Rome by 4 bridges.

Romkala, ruined castle, A. Turkey, Marasch, on the right bank of the Euphrates, where the river Simeren runs into it; 50 NE. Aleppo, 75 SE. Marasch. Lon. 37. 45. E. Lat. 36. 35. N. The castle, though much ruined, is worthy of notice; it was probably the work of the Greek emperors; and is situated at the north end of a chain of mountains over the river. It is about half a mile in circuit, and includes within it 2 churches of Grecian architecture. The mountain here is narrow, and the path on which the castle stands is separated from the mountains, to the south, by a very extraordinary deep fossée cut in the rock. The ascent is on the west side, where there are four terraces cut in the rock, one over another, with a gateway to each of them, some of which are double; many of them are entirely cut out of the rock, and others only in part. The terraces are made with a gentle ascent, and steps from one terrace to another; there is also a great ascent within the castle walls.

It contains 5 convents with splendid churches, and makes a beautiful appearance at a distance, but like other Spanish cities is disgusting on a near inspection. Its chief manufactures are leather and silk stuffs. It is elevated 1,500 yards above the sea, but is so surrounded with high mountains that it appears to be situated in a valley. The country about Ronda is remarkably fertile, and supplies Cadiz with all kinds of fruit and vegetables; the soil is of a reddish colour, with pebbles, and resists the heat of the fire; for which reason it is much used in furnaces for fusing iron. Here is a bridge 280 feet above the water.

Pop. stated by Hassel at 40,000 ; by others as low as 10,000. It was built at the mouth of the river, but is now about 2 leagues distant from it, and about $\frac{1}{2}$ league from the site of the ancient Bolbitinum. It forms the medium of communication between Cairo and Alexandria. The navigation between Rosetta and Alexandria is not devoid of danger, and is carried on by boats of 4 or 5 tons. It spreads along the Nile nearly a league. The houses are built of dingy red brick, the principal ones, as well as the mosques and minarets, are white-washed ; the streets are narrow and gloomy, yet it is one of the most agreeable towns in Egypt. It is distinguished by the beauty and fertility of its environs, being surrounded with groves of date, banana, sycamore, orange, lemon, pomegranate, and other trees. The quay is extensive and well built. The exportation of rice is considerable.

Ross-shire, co. Scot., bounded NE. by the county of Sutherland, E. by the Friths of Dornoch and Murry, S. by Inverness-shire, and W. & NW. by the North Sea. The form is nearly triangular, but much indented on its coasts, and is computed at above 60 miles each side. On the north west part of the county it is desolate and dreary; nothing is here seen, as far as the eye can reach, but vast piles of rocky mountains, with summits broken, serrated, and rising in every form: some of which are almost always covered with snow. But, amid these, the most striking object is an entire mountain of whitish marble, so extensive, smooth, and glossy, and even, as to appear like an enormous sheet of ice. On the east side it is fruitful in corn, fruit, and herbs, abounds in pastures, and woods of fir, of great extent. Pop. 60,853. Sq. m. 2,070

It is the largest town and the only seaport of importance in Mecklenburg. It is surrounded by old fortifications, has 3 suburbs, and is divided into 3 parts, the old, middle, and new towns, but the whole is built in an old fashioned style. Vessels drawing 8 feet come up to the town; larger ones unload at Warnemunde, where is good anchorage. The annual number of arrivals, great and small, is about 600. The trade is chiefly with Holland, England, and the ports of the Baltic. The exports, chiefly corn, amount to from £160,000 to £200,000. It was formerly Hanseatic.—Native, Marshal Blucher.

It is the seat of the highest ecclesiastical and civil courts of the grand duchy, contains a grand ducal mansion, 2 hospitals, 7 chh., a Latin school, a theological seminary, a university, a museum, a botanic garden, and a library. Rotterdam, city & s-p. Neth., in S. Holland, capital of a district, on the Meuse, at the junction of the canal or river Rotte; 13 SE. Hague, 32 S. by W. Amsterdam. Lon. 4. 29. E. Lat. 51. 55. N. Pop. in 1818, 56,300. H. 6,621. It is situated on the north bank of the Meuse, which here resembles an arm of the sea, although it is 20 miles from the mouth. The harbour is convenient, of easy access from the German ocean, and so deep that the largest vessels may enter. Rotterdam is intersected, even more than other towns in Holland by canals, which are generally bordered with rows of trees, and are so broad and deep as to bring vessels of large burden close to the doors of the merchants' warehouses. It is of triangular form, and though not fortified, is surrounded by a moat, and entered by 6 gates towards the land, and 4 towards the water.

The houses are 4, 5, and 6 stories in height, built of small brick, in the peculiar Dutch style, being rather convenient than elegant. The most noted public buildings are the exchange, the great church of St. Lawrence, other chh., the town house, admiralty, academy, theatre, buildings of the East India Company, &c. It has an academy of sciences, cabinets of natural history and of antiquities, and a public library.—Erasmus and the painter Vander Werft were natives of this city; of the former there is to be seen here a bronze statue.

With regard to commerce, Rotterdam ranks next to Amsterdam among the towns of Holland. The greater part of its shipping is employed in the Baltic trade ; but its imports from England exceed in value those from any other country. The number of arrivals in 1817, was 1,771.

Rouen, (an. Rothomagus,) city, France, cap. Lower Seine, formerly capital of Normandy, on N. bank of the Seine, 70 miles by the river from its mouth ; 45 E. Havre, 80 WNW. Paris. Lon. 1. 6. E. Lat. 49. 26. N. Pop. in 1806, 81,089 ; and in 1820, about 87,000. H. 11,000. Abp. see. It is an ancient city, situated in a fertile and pleasant country ; of an oval form, 2 miles long, and 1 broad. The houses are high and of an antiquated style ; the streets very narrow, not kept sufficiently clean ; the interior of the city does not correspond with the beauty of its environs. It contains a Gothic cathedral, built by William the Conqueror, one of the finest in France ; 37 churches, an academy, a lyceum, a public library of 70,000 vols., a museum, a botanic garden, several hospitals, &c.

With regard to manufactures, Rouen is one of the most considerable towns in France. The cotton manufacture is very extensive ; those of woollens and linens very considerable ; in a small degree, iron ware, paper, hats, pottery, refining sugar, &c. The manufactures are computed to give employment to about 50,000 persons. In navigation and commerce it holds only a secondary rank. Vessels of 150 or 200 tons come up to the city. Among the curiosities of Rouen is a celebrated bridge of boats across the Seine, which is to be replaced by a stone bridge, building and in progress in 1820. —Natives, Basnage, Bochart, the two Corneilles, and Fontenelle.

The governments lying wholly in Asia, are Astrachan, Caucasus, Orenburg, Georgia, Tobolsk, Tomsk, and Irkutsk. The three last are included in Siberia, which forms the greater part of Asiatic Russia, for a description of which see Siberia.

Population. The Russian empire has been greatly enlarged within the last 50 years, by the annexation of Finland, a great part of Poland, and districts of Turkey and Persia. The population has been stated at different times as follows:

In 1722	14,000,000	In 1782	28,000,000
1742	16,000,000	1798	36,000,000
1762	19,000,000	1806	41,000,000
In 1816, according to Hassel,	45,500,000.
In 1820, according to Malte-Brun,	46,700,000.

The population is not accurately ascertained: the population returns, made generally for the purpose of levying recruits, or for a capitation tax, leave out females, public officers, the noblesse, and the extreme poor; and the bills of mortality published annually by the clergy are also defective; so that the account in the preceding table for 1820, is little more than a proximate calculation. According to the late official statements the population of the Russian empire amounts to 53,316,797; to which adding nearly 3,000,000 for the kingdom of Poland, the result would be a total of upwards of 56,000,000 subject to the imperial crown. Births, in 1817, 1,498,606: deaths 827,561: increase, in 1817, 671,045. The annual increase is computed by Malte-Brun at 500,000 or 600,000.

Inhabitants. The following statement of the different tribes or classes of inhabitants, is from Malte-Brun:

Vol. II.

59

Slavonians, or Russians, Poles, Cosacs, &c.	41,000,000
Finns, Laplanders, Esthonians, Livonians, &c.	1,380,000
Tartars	1,800,000
Circassians, Georgians, &c.	900,000
Mongols	300,000
Mandchous	80,000
Samoeides and other northern tribes	300,000
Divers Europeans	800,000

Religion. The established religion is that of the Greek church, with a free toleration of all religions. The Greek church includes 4 metropolitan churches, 11 archbishoprics, 36 bishoprics, 26,747 parish churches, 67,900 priests, and including monks and nuns about 400,000.

The number of the different denominations in the empire, is stated by Malte-Brun as follows:

Greek church	36,000,000
Catholics and United Greeks	6,000,000
Lutherans	2,500,000
Reformed	33,000
Armenians	70,000
Mahometans	1,800,000
Jews	230,000

Government. The government was a despotism till 1811, when the present emperor declared it to be a constitutional monarchy, and gave the senate the right of remonstrating against any ukase or edict contrary to law; a power as yet only ostensible, from the almost total want of public opinion in this semi-barbarous country. There are ministers for the great departments, who are responsible to the senate, a large body partly deliberative, and partly executive.—The great mass of the inhabitants, are in a very abject condition, being bought and sold along with the estate which they cultivate.

Revenue. The revenue is estimated at about £15,000,000 sterling; the national debt about £35,000,000.

Army and Navy. The army was stated, in 1819, at 613,000 men: the navy, in 1820, at 30 ships of the line, 20 frigates, 15 sloops, and 200 galleys.

Cities and ports. The principal cities are St. Petersburg, Moscow, Riga, Odessa, Tula, Wilna, Cherson, Twer, Kiev, Jaroslav, Kazan, and Kaluga. The principal ports are St. Petersburg, Riga, Odessa, and Archangel. The chief naval stations are Cronstadt, Revel, Sevenborg, Cherson, and Sevastopol.

Education. There are 8 universities, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Dorpat, Abo, Wilna, Charkov, Kiev, and Kazan. In each of the governments there is a gymnasium. Much has been done within a few years in establishing elementary and higher schools, but education is still at a very low ebb. The literature of Russia is in its infancy, the native publications being very few, and the best books almost all translations.

Commerce. The foreign commerce of Russia is carried on through the Baltic, Black and White seas. The annual value of the imports varies from £10, to 15,000,000 sterling; that of the exports is nearly similar. The chief exports are hemp, flax, seeds, leather, tallow, potash, wax, soap, timber, pitch, tar, train oil, linen, ropes, thread, peltry, and iron. Manufactures are in a very backward state.

Rivers and Lakes. The principal rivers are Volga, Dnieper, Dniester, Don, Dwina, Duna, Neva, Volchov, Msta, and Petchora. The largest lakes are Ladoga, Onega, Ilmen, Peipus, and Bielozero. Russia has great facilities for inland navigation. The Volga and Neva form a communication between the Baltic and Caspian; the Dnieper and Dwina, between the Black sea and Frozen ocean; the Volga and the Dwina, between the Caspian and Frozen ocean; and the Dnieper and Duna, between the Black sea and the Baltic. In these communications the space between the rivers is traversed by a canal.

Face of the country. European Russia is in general a very level country. The only mountains of magnitude are those of the Crimea in the south, of Russian Lapland in the north, and the Ural mountains in the north-east between Europe and Asia.

Climate. The cold of Russia is proverbial, being far greater than that of the west of Europe in the same parallels of latitude. In the southern part it is temperate; in the northern very severe.

Soil, productions, &c. The soil in the southern parts is generally fertile; but advancing north it becomes less so. Agriculture is generally in a very backward state. Rye, barley, and oats, are the principal grain cultivated in the northern provinces; wheat only in the southern; also tobacco; hemp and flax are important articles; potatoes are less common than in Britain. Grazing is an important occupation in most of the provinces. There are valuable mines in the Uralian and other mountains; but the iron mines at present most productive, are not more than 60 miles from Moscow.

Saghalien, or Segalien, or Oku-Jesso, i. e. Upper Jesso, called by the natives Tchoka, isl. or peninsula, on the east side of Tartary, separated from the continent by the narrow channel of Tartary, immediately N. of the island of Jesso. It is not ascertained whether it is an island or a peninsula. It is about 450 miles long from N. to S., and from 40 to 130 in breadth. It appears to be mountainous, particularly towards the centre; the southern part is more fertile, and the soil here is favourable to agriculture, exhibiting a vigorous vegetation, covered with forests of oak, pine, willow, and birch. The southern and western parts are inhabited by the Ainos; the eastern parts have few inhabitants. The sea abounds with fish; and in the rivers are found plenty of trout and salmon. The inhabitants have an air of health and strength. Lon. 144. to 147. E. Lat. 50. to 54. N.

Saguenay, r. Canada, which runs into the river St. Lawrence, Lon. 69. 40. W. Lat. 48. 4. N. This river is not above a mile wide at its mouth, and about 80 or 90 fathoms deep; but higher up it is from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 miles in width, and this lessening of its breadth at its mouth gives it more than a common rapidity; though Charlevoix tells us, that it is navigable for the largest vessels above 75 miles from its mouth. The tide flows up about 70 miles. The course is winding, and the current extremely vehement. Its banks are rocky and very high, rising in some parts to the elevation of 340 yards. It is said to be the largest tributary of the St. Lawrence. The harbour of Tadousac, at its mouth, is sufficient to contain 25 sail of men of war, has good anchorage, and is well sheltered from storms, being of a circular figure, deep, and surrounded at a distance with very high rocks. Length about 350 miles.

Sahara, Zaara, or the Great Desert, an immense tract of territory situated between the states of Barbary and the countries watered by the Niger. In its greatest length it extends nearly across Africa, from the Atlantic to the Nile, forming a space of 45 deg. of Lon., or about 3,000 miles, in breadth about 15 deg.; or 1,000 miles. But the name is usually limited to the main body of the desert, which lies to the west of Fezzan and Cassina, extending through about 30 degrees of Lon. It is much the largest desert on the globe. On the northern side the transition from cultivated land is gradual, and often insensible. A great part of the surface consists of a dead level, stretching on every side like the ocean, and over which the eye roves without any object to arrest or bound its view. In some parts it is covered with small stones sharp as flints; in some places the surface is diversified by ravines, rocks, and eminences covered with shrubs; other parts are composed of moving sand, which, being piled up in hillocks, cannot be passed without the severest labour. These, when blown by the wind, sometimes produce the most terrible effects, and whole caravans have been found buried beneath them.

This vast tract is occasionally diversified by oases, or islands, where a supply of water admits of a certain degree of verdure and cultivation, and affords, in some instances, a support to a certain number of inhabitants, producing grain, oil, wine, and pasture, and in others furnishing merely springs for the refreshment of travellers. These places are inhabited by Nomadic Arabs. The most remarkable tribes are the Monselemine, on the borders of Morocco, the Woled D'leim, and Woled Abbusebah, in the interior, and the Mongearts and Trosarts, on the southern border. This desert is traversed for purposes of commerce by means of the camel, by caravans sometimes consisting of 2,000 persons. These caravans take their departure from every part of northern Africa; but the 3 grand points of rendezvous are Cairo, Mourzouk, and the southern frontier of Morocco. Cairo sends 3 great caravans into the interior, one to Sennaar, one to Darfur, and one to Mourzouk. Mourzouk sends 2 great caravans, 1 to Bornou, and 1 to Cassina, and also holds an intercourse with Tombuctoo; but Morocco possesses the chief communication with Tombuctoo, and has the most numerous caravans. By these caravans are conveyed from Northern Africa, salt, cloths, and various kinds of European goods; in return are received gold, ivory, and slaves.—The coast of Sahara, extending along the desert, is for the most part rocky, dangerous, and destitute of harbours. Hence a considerable number of European vessels suffer shipwreck, and are cast ashore, when the crews suffer the most dreadful fate.

Saida, or Seida, or Seyde, t. Syria, situated on the coast of the Mediterranean, the remains of the ancient Sidon; 55 W. Damascus. Lon. 35. 14. E. Lat. 33. 25. N. Pop. stated variously from 5, to 10,000. It was formerly the residence of a pacha, now removed to Acre. The name of Sidon still subsists in a small village, about half a league from Saida. Saida, like all Turkish towns, is ill built, dirty, and full of modern ruins. Its length along the sea-shore is about 600 paces, and its breadth 150. On the S. side, on a small eminence, is a fort, built by Degnizia. The shoal, which extends along the town, has a basin inclosed by a decayed pier. This was the ancient port; but it is so choaked up by sands, that boats alone can enter its mouth, near the castle. The basin of Saida, if it were emptied, might contain 20 or 25 small vessels. On the side of the sea, the town is without any wall; and that which encloses it on the land side is no better than a prison wall. The whole artillery does not exceed 6 cannon, and these are without carriages and gunners. The garrison scarcely amounts to 100 men. Saida is a considerable trading town, and is the chief emporium of Damascus and the interior country. The French, who are the only Europeans to be found there, have a consul, and 5 or 6 commercial houses. Their exports consist of silks, and particularly of raw and spun cottons. The manufacture of this cotton is the chief art of the inhabitants.

It is situated near the verge of a precipice, which overlooks a spacious bay. The harbour is guarded by piers, and is safe and commodious, but its entrance is narrow, and it is exposed to the NE. winds. The town is $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in circuit, consisting of 3 principal streets, intersected by a few inconsiderable lanes. It contains 2 chh. of the establishment, 2 for dissenters, and 1 for Episcopalians, and a university. The game of golf is greatly practised here on the level sandy downs, and here is a manufactory of golf balls, also one of sail cloth; 11 vessels are owned here, chiefly employed in the coasting trade. Here are 5 annual fairs, and a weekly market. The university is the chief support of the town; it is the oldest one in Scotland, and was founded in 1412. It formerly consisted of 3 colleges, St. Salvator's, St. Leonard's, and St. Mary's, but since 1748, of only 2, St. Salvator's, and St. Leonard's being united into one. St. Salvator's, or the United College, has a principal and 7 professors. St. Mary's, or the New College, called also the Divinity College, being appropriated exclusively to the study of theology, has a principal and 3 professors. The library, common to both, is entitled to a copy of every work entered at Stationers' hall, and contains about 36,000 volumes. The number of students belonging to the university, during the session of 1816-17, was 175.

St. Andrew's, before the reformation, was the see of an archbishop, who was metropolitan of Scotland. It is now greatly declined from its former size and importance, but still presents many interesting remains of past times, as the ruins of a tower and church of the ancient Cul-dees, an Augustinian monastery, a convent of Dominican and Observantine friars, a noted castle, and a magnificent cathedral. The cathedral was 370 ft. by 180 within the walls; founded in 1150, completed in 1318, and demolished by the reformers, in 1559. George Wishart, a reformer, was burnt here, in 1545, by the Catholics; the primate, cardinal Beaton, was put to death by the Protestants, in 1546; and in 1679, archbishop Sharp was murdered by the Covenanters. Here is a lofty monument of white marble, erected to the memory of the archbishop.—The opulence and importance of this city before the reformation may be conceived from the fact, that there was an annual fair here, commencing the beginning of April, and lasting several weeks, to which from 200 to 300 vessels resorted from various parts of the commercial world.

St. Anthony, military post, on the Mississippi, below the falls, at the junction of St. Peter's river, on a point of land formed by a bend in the course of the river, where it makes almost a right angle.

St. Anthony's Falls, in the Mississippi. Lon. 93. 40. W. Lat. 44. 15. N. The river is 627 yards broad above the falls, and immediately below it is contracted within a channel of 209 yards. An island divides the falls into 2 parts. The perpendicular height of the cataract is 161½ feet, besides 58 feet more of a rapid below, so that when viewed from a distance it appears to be much higher than it is. When the river is high, the appearance of these falls is very sublime, as the spray then formed reflects all the colours of the rainbow. The surrounding country is extremely beautiful, exhibiting many gentle ascents, with eminences covered with the finest verdure. The portage around the falls is 260 rods long.

St. Augustine, city & s-p. East Florida, on a bay of the Atlantic, 2 miles within the bar, opposite to the inlet, north of St. Anastasia island; about 30 S. of the mouth of St. John's river, 180 E. St. Mark's, 80 S. St. Mary's, 310 SSW. Charleston, W. 880. Lon. 81. 40. W. Lat. 29. 45. N. The town is built on a peninsula, is of an oblong form, consisting of 4 principal streets, which intersect each other at right angles. It has a pleasant situation, with the advantage of refreshing sea-breezes, and the fragrance of orange groves, and, previously to 1821, has been accounted remarkably healthy. It has a good port, but the bar at its entrance is not passable for vessels drawing more than 8 feet of water. The houses, about 500 in number, are built of stone formed by the concretion of shells, and obtained from the island of St. Anastasia near the town. It is defended by a strong fort, which is built of this stone, and which presents a most formidable appearance on entering the harbour. It is 20 feet high, with walls 12 feet thick, and mounting 36 guns. The catholic church is an old Gothic building. The city has a decayed appearance, many of the houses being in a state of dilapidation. The situation of the country in the vicinity, is low, but well adapted to the cultivation of vegetables and fruits of a southern climate. This town was burnt by Sir Francis Drake in 1586; by captain Davis, with the Buccaneers in 1685; besieged and burnt by the English in 1702; unsuccessfully attacked by the English under general Oglethorpe in 1744; in 1821, Feb. 22, a treaty was signed by which Florida was ceded to the United States. A few years before the cession to the United States the population of St. Augustine was estimated at 5,000. In 1821, it was visited with distressing sickness by the yellow fever: the population, in August 1821, was estimated at 2,500; in December, at only 1,500 or 1,600. A newspaper is published here.

17. 54. N. Pop. about 8,000. Though much of the soil of this island is unfit for cultivation, yet it produces tobacco, sugar, cotton, indigo, and cassava, with some excellent woods and limestone, with which the inhabitants furnish their neighbours. All the fresh water they have is saved in cisterns; and the island itself is encompassed by formidable rocks, which render it dangerous of access to shipping. Its chief products for exportation are drugs and lignum vitæ. The only town is called Gustavia, or St. Bartholomew, and contains about 4,000 inhabitants; and the only harbour is La Carenage, near Gustavia.

St. Catherines, isl. in the S. Atlantic ocean, near the coast of Brazil. Its breadth from E. to W. is only 2 leagues ; and it is only separated from the main land by a channel 200 toises over in the narrowest part. The soil is exceedingly fertile, and produces all sorts of fruit, vegetables, and corn, almost spontaneously. It is covered with trees of everlasting green, but they are so interwoven with briars and creeping plants, that it is impossible to get through the forests otherwise than by opening a path with a hatchet. Danger is besides to be apprehended from snakes, whose bite is mortal. The habitations, both on the island and continent, are close to the sea side. The woods that surround them are delightfully fragrant, owing to the number of orange trees, and other odoriferous trees and shrubs that they contain. But, notwithstanding all these advantages, the country is very poor, and totally destitute of manufactured commodities, so that the peasants are almost naked or covered with rags. Their soil, which is very fit for the cultivation of sugar, remains unproductive for the want of slaves, whom they are not rich enough to purchase. The whale fishery is very successful. Lon. 49. 16. W. Lat. 28. S. Pop. of the island and its dependencies about 30,000.

St. Catherine's, capital of the island of the same name, on east shore, having a port which may be entered by ships of 300 tons. Pop. 5, or 6,000. The houses are generally from 2 to 3 stories, and well built. The trade is inconsiderable.

St. Christina, one of the Marquis of Mendoza's islands in the Pacific ocean. This island stretches N. and S.; is 9 miles long in that direction, and about 7 leagues in circuit. A narrow ridge of hills, of considerable height, extends the whole length of the island. There are other ridges, which, rising from the sea, and with an equal ascent, join the main ridge. These are disjointed by deep and narrow valleys, which are fertile, adorned with fruit and other trees, and watered by fine streams of excellent water. Lon. 139. 7. E. Lat. 9. 55. S.

St. Christopher, or St. Kitts, isl. in the West-Indies, belonging to Great Britain, discovered by Columbus in 1493; about 15 miles in length, and in general about 4 in breadth, but towards the eastern extremity not more than 3, and between that part and the rest of the island is a strip of land three miles in length, which does not measure half a mile across. This island contains 43,726 acres of land, of which about 17,000 acres are appropriated to the growth of sugar, and 4,000 to pasturage. As sugar is the only commodity of any account that is raised, except provisions and a little cotton, it is probable, that nearly one half of the whole island is unfit for cultivation. The interior part of the country consists indeed of many rugged precipices, and barren mountains. Of these the loftiest is Mount Misery, (evidently a decayed volcano,) which rises 3,711 feet in perpendicular height from the sea. The general average produce for a series of years is 16,000 hogsheads of 16 cwt.; which, as one half only of the whole cane land, or 8,500 acres, is annually cut, (the remainder being young canes) gives nearly two hogsheads of 16 cwt. per acre for the whole of the land in ripe canes. This island is divided into nine parishes, and contains four towns and hamlets; viz. Basseterre, the present capital, as it was formerly that of the French, containing about 800 houses: Sandy-Point, Old-Road, and Deep-Bay. Of these, the two first are ports of entry, established by law. The fortifications consist of Charles-Fort, and Brimstone-Hill, both near Sandy-Point; three batteries at Basseterre, one at Fig-tree bay, another at Palmeto Point, and some smaller ones of no great importance. Pop. in 1805, 27,998; whites 1,800; free people of colour 198; slaves 26,000.—Official value of imports and exports.

St. Denis, t. France, principal place of a district, in Seine ; 5 N. Paris. Pop. 4,425. It owes its rise to a celebrated abbey, founded about the time of Charles the Bald. The church built in a Gothic style, was remarkable for the delicacy of its structure, and richness of its ornaments. In the treasury were kept the crown jewels. This church was likewise the burial place of the kings of France, from Dagobert. In the year 1567, a battle was fought near this town, between the Catholics and Protestants, in which the latter were defeated.

St. Domingo, or Hispaniola, called by the original natives and the present possessors, Hayti, one of the largest and most fertile of the West India islands, extending in length from E. to W., 390 miles, and in breadth from 60 to 150 ; situated between Jamaica and Cuba on the west, and Porto Rico on the east. Lon. 67. 35. to 74. 15. W. Lat. 17. 37. to 20. N. It was formerly divided between the French and Spaniards: the line of demarcation extending from the river Pedernates on the south side, to the river Massacre on the north side at the head of the bay of Mancenille. The part on the west side of this line belonged to the French; the eastern part to the Spaniards. Pop. of the French part, in 1789, before it fell into the possession of the blacks, according to Edwards 534,831; whites 30,831; free people of colour 24,000; slaves 480,000. Pop. according to Alcedo 686,000; whites 42,000; free people of colour 44,000; slaves 600,000. Acres of land 2,500,000; of which 1,500,000 were in high cultivation. Pop. of the Spanish part by the census of 1785, 152,640; according to Alcedo, in 1798, 125,000, (110,000 free, and 15,000 slaves;) according to Walton, in 1810, 104,000. Sq. leagues 3,200.—The value of exports of the French colony, in 1791, amounted to £5,371,593. The amount of some of the principal articles was as follows; coffee 84,617,328 lbs., sugar 217,463 casks, indigo 3,257,610 lbs., cocoa 1,536,017 lbs., cotton 11,317,226 lbs. The number of French vessels employed in the trade of St. Domingo, in 1789, was 710. Since the revolution the commerce has greatly declined. Chief towns of the French part, Cape François, Port au Prince, and Aux Cayes; of the Spanish part, St. Domingo.

The country is much diversified with extensive plains and elevated mountains, and has a great variety of soil, but for the most part very fertile, consisting of a rich clay, in some places mixed with light gravel lying on a substratum of rock. It is well watered, and affords almost every variety of vegetable produce, that can promote the luxury or comfort of man. The western part is generally mountainous, but fertile, full of woods, and contains mines of iron and silver; the eastern part is more level, consisting chiefly of fertile plains. The climate is moist and hot; the thermometer in the plains rising to 99 deg.; in the higher parts to 72 deg. and 77 deg.; but the heat is moderated by a regular sea breeze.

The famous decree of the French national convention, that all men are born equal and free, led to the revolution in St. Domingo. Contests arose between the whites and free people of colour, when they were overwhelmed by their common enemy, the slaves, who, in August 1791, rose against their masters by common consent, and rendered the whole French part of the island a scene of massacre and devastation. The island was taken possession of by a British force in 1793, but they were compelled to evacuate it in 1798, and the independence of St. Domingo was declared on the 1st of July 1801. It was afterwards divided between two chiefs, Christophe ruling over the northern part, his capital being Cape François, and Petion ruling the southern districts. These chiefs are both dead, and the parts of the island are now united under president Boyer. Port au Prince is the present seat of government.

St. Domingo, city, and capital of the part of St. Domingo which belonged to the Spaniards. Lon. 69. 59. W. Lat. 18. 28 N. Pop. before it fell into the possession of the blacks 20, or 30,000; afterwards reduced to 12,000. It is the oldest town in America, founded by Columbus in 1496. It is 4,500 yards in circuit; the streets straight and broad, crossing one another at right angles; the houses well proportioned, some of them built of a species of marble, others of a glutinous red earth mixed with lime. They are in the old Spanish style, with flat roofs. It is situated on a river, at some distance from the sea, and had formerly a harbour, which is now choaked up with sand. Though its trade has been long extinct, as long as it continued in possession of the Spaniards, it was still in a respectable condition. It was the see of an archbishop. The clergy here were numerous and rich; and the hospital had a revenue of 20,000 ducats a year. St. Domingo boasted of a Latin school, and a university, 7 large monasteries, 2 nunneries, and a college, with a revenue of 4,000 ducats, besides a power of coinage. Its cathedral is spacious and magnificent.

St. Eustatia, or St. Eustatius, one of the Leeward Caribbee islands, belonging to the Dutch ; 9 NW. St. Christopher's. Lon. 63. 5. W. Lat. 17. 30. N. This may be more properly termed a huge pyramidal rock rising out of the waves, than an island ; yet for its size, it is incomparably the most valuable of all the Caribbees. It has but one landing place, and that, though difficult of access, is fortified with all the art that can render it impregnable, and nothing has been wanting, on the part of its masters, to make every inch of the island equally so. Tobacco is its chief product, and it is cultivated on its sides to the very top of the pyramid, which terminates in a plain surrounded with woods, but having a hollow in the middle, which serves as a large den for wild beasts. No less than 5,000 white people, and 15,000 negroes, subsist upon this island, rear hogs, kids, rabbits, and all kinds of poultry, in such abundance, that they can supply their neighbours, after having served themselves.

Pop. 131,500 ; three fifths Catholics, the rest Protestants. Sq. m. 1,102. It is formed chiefly of the estates belonging to the ancient abbey of St. Gall, from which it takes its name. The surface in the northern part is rugged, covered with lofty mountains, whose summits are covered with enormous masses of snow and glaciers. The northern part consists of beautiful cultivated hills, plains, and valleys, covered with fields and vineyards. The soil in the plains is fertile, but generally better adapted to pasture than tillage. The products are cattle, corn, wine, flax, and hemp ; and there are manufactures of linen and cotton. The principal mountains are Kammor and Sentis, between 7,000 & 8,000 feet high. It is watered by the Rhine, Sitter, Tamin, and Saar ; and the lakes Constance, Zurich, and Wallenstadt. It is divided into 8 districts. The government is aristodemocratical.

It contains an academy, a gymnasium with 9 classes, and a public library with a cabinet of coins and of natural history. It derives its name from a princely abbey of St. Gall, situated within the walls of the town. The town is situated between two mountains, on the small river Steinach. It is chiefly important as a place of trade, and is the centre of commerce and manufactures of the surrounding cantons. It has long been celebrated for its manufactures of linen goods, muslin, and cotton cloth.

Lat. 37. 51. N. Pop. 1,500. This town was formerly built on the river bank, and is said to have contained once 7,000 inhabitants. The ground on which it stands is somewhat higher than the river bottom, and it begins to extend itself back upon ground considerably more elevated. On an elevation in the rear of the town a handsome stone building has been erected for an academy, which commands a fine prospect. This town contains a courthouse, a jail, a Catholic chapel, a branch of the Missouri bank, and about 300 houses. It is one of the principal lead markets, and before the settlement of Herculanum, all the lead made at the mines was exported from this place. It carries on considerable commerce with the interior, supplying the inhabitants with foreign merchandize, and receiving in return lead, corn, wheat, beef, pork, whiskey, and peltry.

St. George, town & capital of the island of Grenada, formerly called Fort Royal. Lon. 61. 31. W. Lat. 12. 4. N. Pop. about 10,000. It is situated near S. end, on W. coast, and possessing one of the best harbours in the English

West-Indies, which has lately been fortified at a great expense. The town of St. George is built chiefly of brick, and makes a handsome appearance. It is divided by a ridge, which, running into the sea, forms on one side the carenage, on the other the bay: thus there is the Bay-town, which boasts a handsome square and market; and the Carenage-town, wherein the principal merchants reside, the ships lying land-locked, and in deep water, close to the wharves. On the ridge, between the 2 towns, stands the church; and on the promontory above is a large old fort, which was probably constructed by the first French inhabitants. It is built of stone, and is large enough to accommodate an entire regiment.

St. Gothard, an elevated tract, Switz., between the cantons of Uri and Tesin. It consists properly of a circular plain, surrounded on all sides by lofty Alps, whose height varies from 8,000 to upwards of 10,000 feet above the level of the sea. The whole group is called St. Gothard, but the summits have distinct names, as Peschiora, Salla, Prosa, Fieudo, Petina, Lozendro, &c. Their tops are covered with perpetual snow, and some of them with glaciers. Peschiora, 30 N. Locarno, one of the highest summits, is 10,620 feet above the level of the sea. No less than 30 lakes are situated in this lofty range, and here are the sources of the Rhine, Rhone, Tesin, and Reuss. Of these, the Reuss most attracts the attention of the traveller, as it runs parallel with the road a great part of the way, and over it the singular arch, called the Devil's Bridge, is erected, the abutments resting on each side on peaks of rock, at so great an elevation above the torrent as to appear a work almost superhuman. The bridge consists of a single arch of 80 feet span, at the place where the river has a fall of 100 feet.

The passage across these mountains into Italy, has opened a new channel for active industry. The road is not so steep and difficult as might be expected. It is from 10 to 15 feet broad, and well paved with granite, but the passage is frequently rendered difficult in winter by masses of snow. It is not impracticable for carriages, but they have not been used. The most striking part of this singular route is the subterranean passage cut through a mass of rock, between two lofty ridges and called the gallery of Urnerlock or Rochepercee. The opening is 12 feet wide, 12 high, and 200 in length; is almost dark, the light being admitted only at the ends, and at a small crevice in the rock. Nothing can exceed the contrast exhibited to the traveller, coming from the north, who, after seeing nature in her most frightful form, and passing this dreary cavern, opens all at once on the delightful vale of Urseren.

St. Helena, isl. in the Atlantic ocean, 200 leagues from Ascension island, the nearest land, 400 from the coast of Africa, and 600 from that of S. America. Lon. 5. 50. W. Lat. 15. 55. S. It is 10½ miles long, and 6¾ broad; about 28 in circuit, and contains 30,000 acres on its surface, of which the greater part is a barren waste. There are only 2 plains in this whole extent, the largest of which, at Longwood, contains 1,500 acres of fine land. About 8,000, acres on the island have been brought under cultivation.

The richest land produces 3 crops of potatoes in a year, amounting in all to 400 bushels per acre. On almost every farm are produced vines, figs, limes, oranges, lemons, citrons, peaches, pomegranates, melons, &c. The climate is very temperate and salubrious. The thermometer seldom rises, in summer, above 80 deg., and in winter its ordinary range is from 55 deg. to 56 deg. The population, in 1805, exclusive of the garrison and civil establishment, amounted to 2,064, of whom 504 were whites, and 1,560 blacks. In 1814, the whole population, including the garrison, which is usually about 1,000, was estimated at 4,000. James town is the principal place. The largest street contains about 28 houses, neatly built, 2 stories high. The view on each side from the streets is awfully sublime, and discovers enormous masses of rock impending over the valley in a manner sufficiently alarming to the mind of a stranger. Upon an average for 5 years, from 1801 to 1805 inclusive, 165 ships touched annually at this island.

The island of St. Helena, when first seen at sea, presents the appearance of a naked, rugged rock, extremely abrupt at its northern extremity, but more shelving towards the south. Upon a nearer approach, the central eminences are perceived clothed with verdure, and towering to the clouds. Upon drawing still nearer, these are again shut up from the view, and nothing is beheld but a girdle of inaccessible precipices overhanging the ocean, some of them exhibiting the most fantastic shapes, and others rent down to their base, disclosing the most hideous chasms. These rocks are principally basaltic. The whole mass has every appearance of having been produced by a submarine volcano. The sea around the coast is of unfathomable depth, and vessels may pass within a cable's length of almost perpendicular cliffs 1,600 feet in height. The only anchorage is in Chapel Valley bay, on NW. side of the island. The principal inlets by which the island can be approached are James' town, Rupert's bay, Leman valley, on NW. side, and Sandy bay, on SE.; all of them regularly and strongly fortified. Diana's peak, the highest point of land on the island, is nearly 2,700 feet above the level of the sea. The height of Cuckold's point is 2,672; of Halley's mount 2,467; of Flag staff 2,272; of Barns-cliff 2,015; of the alarm house in the centre of the island 1,960; of Ladder hill 1,903; and of Longwood house 1,762.

This extraordinary spot of ground, independently of its political and commercial advantages, may justly be regarded as a most interesting natural curiosity; but a few years since it became an object of peculiar interest and attention, in consequence of its being selected as the prison of Napoleon Bonaparte, who was sent to this island by the allied sovereigns of Europe, in August 1815, and was landed here on the 18th of October following. Here he resided till May 5, 1821, when he died of an internal cancer in the breast.—In addition to the almost inaccessible ramparts, with which it is provided by nature, its eminences were covered with telegraphs and watch towers, & its various fortifications defended by nearly 600 pieces of cannon, thus rendered, with ordinary vigilance and a competent garrison, impregnable by any external force.

St. Helier, t. capital of the island of Jersey, situated on the E. side of the bay of St. Aubin. Lon. 2. 8. W. Lat. 48. 38. N. Pop. 6,460. It is situated at the foot of a long and high rocky hill ; at the east end is a well-built, populous town, greatly improved and enlarged within the last century. It has a spacious watering place, and handsome town hall. The market-place in the centre is spacious, surrounded with handsome houses, among which is the Cohue Royale, or court of justice. At the top of the market place is a statue of George II., of bronze gilt. The market is held on Saturday, and is much frequented. Three gazettes are published weekly here in French, and one in English.

St. Jago, or Santiago, city, S. A., capital of of Chili, and of a province of the same name, founded by Valdivia, in 1541 ; 75 SE. Valparaiso. Lon. 76. 46. W. Lat. 33. 30. S. Population estimated at 46,000. Bp. see. It is situated in a beautiful plain, of vast extent. The town is watered by the little river Mapocho, which is swelled in summer by the melting of the snow in the Cordilleras, and in winter by the excessive rains ; yet it is for the most part fordable. Its water is always foul, which the inhabitants filtre through a kind of stone. For preventing inundations, they have built a wall and a dike, by means of which the waters are at times conveyed for watering the gardens, and cooling the streets. Besides these they draw larger streams for driving the mills in several parts of the city. The streets are laid out according to the four cardinal points ; they are exactly in a line, and neatly paved with small stones. The houses are commodious, and the commerce of the city very extensive. The earthquakes, frequent here, have much damaged the city.

The governor has the titles of president and captain-general, on account of his two employments of the gown and sword. Besides the cathedral, here are 4 parish churches, but small, 9 monasteries, 7 nunneries, several chapels, 3 hospitals, 4 colleges, a university, and other public buildings. At St. Jago is the tribunal of the inquisition of Chili, where the commissary-general and his officers reside.

Si. Jago, t. New Mexico, in New Leon.

St. Jago, one of the largest of the Cape Verd islands, one of the best cultivated, and most fertile; about 60 miles in circumference. The people in general are black, or at best of a mixed colour, except a few of the better rank, the governor, the bishop, some gentlemen, who trade or live upon their plantation, and the padres; though many of the latter are blacks. Cotton is produced in such abundance in St. Jago, that besides the quantities sent to the Brazils, and sold to the European nations, almost all the natives are clothed with this manufacture. Here are vines, of which the natives make a wine that is not contemptible; but as they are supplied with better by the European shipping, it has fallen into disrepute. The chief fruits of the island, besides a profusion of plantains, are citrons, lemons, oranges, musk, and water-melons, limes, guavas, pomegranates, quinces, custard-apples, papas, &c. The chief towns are St. Jago and Praya. Lon. 23. 40. W. Lat. 15. 4. N. Pop. 16,000.

St. Jago, s-p. and once the capital of the isl. of St. Jago, and of all the Cape de Verd islands; the residence of the governor, and the see of a bishop. It is situated on the banks of the Dolce, which is here pretty large, and navigable for vessels of burthen, and affording a plenty and variety of fish. The town consists only of 300 houses, or 500 families, & is quite without walls, ditch, or other fence. The inhabitants are mostly mestizoes, and mulattoes of a dark yellow complexion, indolent, and sickly, from the heat of the climate, and addicted more to pleasure than to any traffic or labour. The town stands on a flat, but surrounded with forests, which cause a stagnation of the air.

St. Ildefonso, v. & royal palace of the king of Spain, in Old Castile, built in a mountainous country, by Philip V. in imitation of Versailles ; 6 SE. Segovia, 40 N. by W. Madrid. Pop. 4,287. The exterior of the palace is not very magnificent, but the interior contains a great number of valuable paintings, statues, &c. The gardens are very magnificent, being the chief ornament. The elevation of the palace above the sea is 3,789 feet, the highest royal residence in Europe. A modern traveller says, it is singular that the castle and gardens of St. Ildefonso should have cost about 45 millions of piastres, precisely the sum in which Philip died indebted.—At this place a peace was signed between the king of Spain and the French republic, on the 4th of August, 1795.

It has a custom house, and was established in 1796 as the sole port of entry and clearance for all goods imported from the interior of the United States into Canada. It is a small town, of a mean, dirty appearance, consisting mostly of one street. Here is an ancient and extensive fort, now a venerable ruin. A canal is contemplated from this place to fort Chambly.

St. John's, or Prince Edward's Island, isl. in the gulf of St. Lawrence, near N. coast of Nova Scotia, to which government it is annexed. Lon. 44. 22. to 46. 32. W. Lat. 45. 46. to 47. 10. N. It is 117 miles long from NE. to SW., about 20 in average breadth. Pop. about 5,000. Chief towns, Charlotte's Town, the capital, George Town, Prince's Town, Hillsborough, Pownal, and Maryborough. The north and south coasts are much indented with bays. It is well watered, the soil generally fertile, and the rivers abound with fish, as salmon, trout, and eels. It was taken from the French by the English in 1745, when it had 10,000 head of black cattle, & several of the farmers raised 12,000 bushels of corn annually. When possessed by the French it was so much improved as to be called the granary of Canada.

St. John's, r. New-Brunswick, which rises in Canada and the northern part of Maine, waters the NE. part of Maine, flows SE. through New-Brunswick, and runs into the bay of Fundy on W. side of the city of St. John's. It is 350 miles long; the tide flows up about 80 miles; it is navigable for boats 200 miles, and for sloops of 50 tons 80 miles. This river and its branches water a large tract of excellent country, much of which is settled. About 30 miles from its mouth commences a fine level country of rich meadow lands, well clothed with timber and wood, as pine, beech, elm, maple, and walnut. The river furnishes a great quantity of salmon, bass, and sturgeon; and it is the common route to Quebec.—About a mile above the city of St. John's is the only entrance into this river. It is about 80 or 100 yards wide, 400 yards long, called the falls of the river. It being narrow, and a ridge of rocks running across the bottom of the channel, on which there are not above 17 feet of water, it is not sufficiently spacious to discharge the fresh waters of the river above. The common tides here rising about 20 feet, the waters of the river at low water, are about 12 feet higher than the waters of the sea; at high water the waters of the sea are about 5 feet higher than those of the river: so that at every tide there are two falls, one outwards, and one inwards. The only time of passing with safety is when the waters of the river and of the sea are level, which is twice in a tide, and continues only about 20 minutes each time.

St. John's, city & s-p. New-Brunswick, near the mouth of the river St. John's. Lon. 66. W. Lat. 45. 20. N. Pop. in 1821, estimated at 8 or 10,000. It is situated on the side of a hill, is a very flourishing town, much the largest in New-Brunswick, tolerably built, mostly of wood. It has lately been made a free port, and has an active commerce. The exports consist chiefly of timber, also grindstones, fish, &c. The number of vessels entered here in 1820, was 1,156; cleared 1,183.

St. John's, s-p. and chief town of Newfoundland, on E. coast, on a bay of the same name; 6 NW. Cape Spear, 18 SE. Cape St. Francis. Lon. 52. 29. W. Lat. 47. 32. N. Pop. in 1815, about 12,000. It has one of the best harbours in the island, with from 10 to 17 fathoms of water up to King's wharf, which is a little NW. of Old Fort at the bottom of the town, and is a mile from the mouth of the harbour. The fish caught on the banks are dried and packed here for Europe. The streets are narrow and dirty, and the buildings low and mean. All kinds of provisions, except fish, are scarce and dear. This town has suffered greatly by fires. In Feb. 1816, a conflagration occasioned great loss; in 1817, Nov. 7, 135 buildings were burnt —property destroyed estimated at £500,000; on the 21st of the same month was another great fire; and in 1818, Aug. 21st, a fire again broke out by which great loss was incurred.

St. Lawrence, r. N. A., one of the largest in the world. It is the outlet by which the waters of the great lakes Superior, Huron, Michigan, Erie, and Ontario, are poured into the ocean through the gulf of St. Lawrence. This great river, in different parts of its course, is known by different names. From the sea to lake Ontario it is called St. Lawrence; but the name Cateraqui, or Iroquois, is sometimes applied to the part between Montreal and lake Ontario. Between lakes Ontario and Erie it is called Niagara river; between lakes Erie & St. Clair, Detroit river; between lakes St. Clair and Huron, St. Clair's river; between lakes Huron & Superior, St. Mary's river, or the Narrows.

forming thus an uninterrupted connexion of upwards of 2,000 miles. It is navigable for ships of the line to Quebec, about 400 miles, and to Montreal for ships of 600 tons, 580 miles. The distance from Montreal to lake Ontario is 190 or 200 miles. The tide flows up as far as Three Rivers. Its breadth between Montreal and Quebec is from $\frac{1}{2}$ mile to 4 miles; the average breadth about 2 miles. Below Quebec it gradually widens, till it enters the gulf, where, from Cape Rosier to the Mingan settlement on the Labrador coast, it is about 105 miles in breadth. The country, through which it flows, from the lake to the gulf, is generally fertile, & much of it well cultivated, and rapidly improving; on both sides the prospect is delightful, numerous villages, for the most part built round a handsome stone church, invite the traveller's attention, while single houses and farms appear at agreeable distances. The river in several places spreads out into large lakes, as lakes St. Francis, St. Louis, and Deux Montagnes; and there are numerous islands, shoals, and rapids. From the beginning of December to the middle of April, it is totally suspended by frost. The breaking up of the ice in the spring is described as a most stupendous operation of nature.

St. Lawrence, (Gulf of,) gulf, which receives the waters of the St. Lawrence, formed between the western part of Newfoundland, the eastern shores of Labrador, the eastern extremity of New Brunswick, part of Nova Scotia, and the island of Cape Breton. It communicates with the Atlantic by 3 passages, on the north by the straits of Belleisle, between Labrador & Newfoundland, on the south-east by the passage between Cape Ray and Newfoundland, and by the gut of Canso, which divides Cape Breton from Nova Scotia. The distance from Cape Rosier to Cape Ray is 79 leagues; from Nova Scotia to Labrador 106.

St. Louis, co. Missouri, W of the Mississippi, S. of the Missouri. Pop. 10,079.

St. Louis, p-t. St. Louis co., and the chief town of Missouri, on W. bank of the Mississippi, 18 miles by water below the junction of the Missouri, and 14 above that of the Merrimack, 30 below that of the Illinois, 200 above that of the Ohio, 1,180 above New Orleans, about 1,100 below the falls of St. Anthony, W. 897. Lon. 89. 36. W. Lat. 38. 36. N. Pop. in 1810, 1,600 ; in 1820, 4,598 ; labourers 635 ; mechanics 470 ; engaged in commerce 92 ; grocers and tavern keepers 49 ; clerks and agents 106 ; lawyers 23 ; physicians 15. The situation of the town is elevated, pleasant, and healthy. The ground on which it stands rises gradually from the first to the second bank. Three streets run parallel with the river, and are intersected by a number of others at right angles. The town extends along the river about 2 miles.

The second bank is about 40 feet higher than the plain on which the town is chiefly built, and affords a fine view of the town and river. On this bank stand the fortifications, erected in early times for the defence of the place. They consist of several circular towers, 20 feet in diameter, and 15 in height, a small stockaded fort, and a stone breast work. The courts are held in one of the buildings of the fort, and another is used for a prison. The town contains 3 houses of public worship, a land office, a brewery, 2 water mills, 1 steam mill, a museum, 2 banks, a theatre, and 2 printing offices, from each of which is issued a weekly newspaper. The houses are mostly of wood, but many are built of stone and are white washed ; but few of them are handsome. Most of the houses are furnished with a large garden.

St. Louis was first established in 1764. It is at present in a state of rapid improvement, fast increasing in population and trade. Its situation is advantageous and interesting, being more central with regard to the whole territory belonging to the United States, than any other considerable town ; and uniting the advantages of the three great rivers, Mississippi, Missouri, and Illinois, with their numerous branches, and possessing unrivalled facilities for an extensive trade, it will probably become a large city, and be the centre of an extensive commerce. The country around and west of St. Louis, for the distance of 15 miles, is an extended prairie of a very luxuriant soil.

St. Louis, r. NW. Territory, which flows into the bay of Fond du Lac, at W. end of lake Superior, Lon. 91. 52. W. Lat. 46. 44. N. This river is much obstructed by falls and rapids. A few miles above the mouth, and below the lower falls, the N. W. Company have a house.

St. Louis, t. Africa, capital of the French settlements on the Senegal, on an island in the middle of the river Senegal, near its mouth. Lon. 16. 8. W. Lat. 16. 5. N. Pop. in 1787, permanent white inhabitants about 60 ; officers, military, naval, and civil, and European servants, about 600 ; free negroes and mulattoes about 2,400 ; domestic slaves about 2,400 ; negroes in confinement ready for embarkation, during the prevalence of the slave trade, usually about 1,200 ; total population about 6,000. The island is $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. long, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile wide, a mere bank of white moving sand, entirely arid, with no appearance of vegetation, but the town is well supplied from the opposite continent. The streets are well arranged, generally composed of thatched cottages or huts, interspersed with some stone houses. The most important article of commerce is the gum Senegal.

St. Lucia, or St. Alousie, one of the Caribbee islands, in the West Indies, belonging to Great Britain; 27 miles long, and 12 broad; 18 S. Martinico. Lon. 61. 0. W. Lat. 13. 37. N. This island exhibits a variety of hills, and among others, two that are remarkably round and high, said to be volcanoes. At the bottom of these are plains, finely watered with rivers, and very fertile. The air, by the disposition of the hills, which admit the trade winds into the island, is very healthy. The soil produces trees, which are fit for building houses and windmills, and have often been employed for that purpose by both the French and the English planters. It likewise affords cocoa and fustic. It is provided with many bays and harbours, the chief of which, called Little Carenage, is accounted the best in all the Caribbees. Pop. in 1803, 16,640; whites 1,290; people of colour 1,660; slaves 13,690. The town of Carenage contains 5, or 6,000 inhabitants; and Castres 3, or 4,000.

St. Maura, or Santa Maura, (an. Neritos, Leucadia, Leucate, and Leucas,) island in the Mediterranean sea, about 50 miles in circ. Lon. 20. 39. E. Lat. 39. 4. N. Pop. 20,000. Sq. m. 115. This island was anciently a peninsula, connected with the continent of Acarnania ;

but the Carthaginians, or, according to others, the Corinthians, severed it, insomuch, that at present between the island and the continent there is a channel about 50 paces broad. It produces great plenty of salt, also game, wine, oil, citrons, pomegranates, almonds, & other fruits, with fine pastures. The inhabitants are Greeks, subject to a bishop. In this island were formerly 3 considerable towns, with a most magnificent temple of Venus. By the treaty of Campo Formio it was ceded to France ; but in 1799 it was declared one of the Seven Islands formed into a republic. On SW. part of this island is a promontory from the top of which was the celebrated Lover's Leap.

St. Maura, or Amazichi, t. & capital of the island of the same name, situated at the north extremity, on a narrow point, almost surrounded by the sea. Pop. 6,000. It is enclosed by walls and towers, and defended by a strong castle. The town is ill built and dirty, but has a tolerably good port. Beyond its works, in a morass, are two well inhabited islands or suburbs. The little islands between this and the continent communicate by bridges.

St. Michael, or San Miguel, isl. in the Atlantic, and the largest of those called Azores. Lon. between 25. & 26. W. Lat. 37. 42. to 38. 8. N. It is about 55 miles long, and 12 broad. Pop. 61,058. Sq. miles 318. The soil is extremely fertile, and the climate remarkably salubrious and temperate. The thermometer rarely sinks below 50°, or rises above 70°; no venomous animals or reptiles are found here, and when carried hither they soon die. It produces abundant crops of Indian corn, wheat, beans, and potatoes. Yams, onions, sweet potatoes, and the ordinary vegetables of Europe, are successfully cultivated; two crops are obtained yearly. The principal sources of wealth of the inhabitants are oranges, lemons, and corn. Oranges are abundant, and of excellent quality. The quantity annually exported is from 50 to 60,000 boxes; in some very productive years, 3,000 boxes of lemons, and 80,000 of oranges. The quantity of corn annually exported is about 300,000 bushels. Next to oranges, grapes are the most abundant fruit, but little wine, however, is exported. Black cattle, sheep, goats, and asses, are abundant.

The island, like the rest of the Azores, is remarkable for its geological structure, bearing marks of recent and volcanic origin. It rises abruptly from the sea, presenting along its coast, with few exceptions, a mural precipice. The surface is diversified, a chain of mountains extending through it; the highest summit of which is Pico da Vara. The chief towns are Ponta Delgada and Franca Villa.

It is situated near the borders of Peru, at the foot of a high mountain, which forms part of the Eastern Andes. A little above the town runs a considerable river, which afterwards falls into the Leon. It has about 200 houses, and is the most northerly town in the province.

St. Salvador, or Bahia, or Ciudad de Bahia, city & s-p. Brazil, capital of Bahia, at the entrance of the bay of All Saints. Lon. 38. 32. W. Lat. 12. 58. S. Pop. of the city and suburbs estimated at upwards of 100,000 ; whites 30,000 ; mulattoes 30,000 ; the rest negroes. Abp. see. It is situated on the right side of the bay, where the land at a small distance from the shore, rises steeply to a high ridgy hill, on the summit of which the city is erected, with the exception of a single street that runs parallel to the beach. From the inequality of the ground and the plantations interspersed, it occupies a considerable space. The buildings are chiefly of the 17th century, ill constructed, and from the slightness of the materials rapidly decaying, which diminishes the effect of many of them that were once sumptuous. The town is divided into high and low, the latter, consisting of certain streets filled with store-houses, on the shores of the bay, for the convenience of loading and unloading. The churches are most distinguished and expensive edifices, but some of them are falling to decay. The cathedral is large, but falling to ruin. The grand church of the ex-Jesuits is by far the most elegant structure in the city. It is composed entirely of European marble, built at great expense, and profusely decorated. The college and monastery adjoining it, were the most extensive and best endowed in Brazil, but for the last 40 years have been unoccupied, and have lately been converted into a hospital. The churches, chapels, monasteries, and convents, present a tedious load of ornaments, bad taste, and excess of superstition.

The streets are narrow, wretchedly paved, never cleaned, and therefore disgustingly dirty. Some of the superior class of inhabitants have large and elegant mansions, but the greater part of houses of the opulent are indifferent. The houses of tradesmen and shop-keepers are mean, having, instead of glazed windows, wooden drop-lattices. The lowest order of soldiers, mulattoes, and negroes, have tiled cabins open to the roof, with a single lattice window. The city is protected by a number of forts and batteries. The custom-house and wharfs are on the beach, as also is the dock-yard ; near which are the marine store-houses and offices, with the house of the intendant. This city carries on a considerable commerce. The exports are gold, sugar, tobacco, Brazil wood, skins, balsam of copagni, ipecacuanha, and many other drugs ; imports, linen, cloths, hats, stockings, grain, rice, flour, biscuit, port-wine, furniture, negroes, oil, cheese, butter, and bacon.

St. Salvador, or Banza St. Salvador, city, Africa, and capital of Congo. Lon. 14. 32. E. Lat. 5. 45. S. Bp. see. According to the accounts of the Portuguese many years since, it contained nearly 40,000 inhabitants, of whom about 4,000 were whites. This city in past times was called Banza, which in that language generally signifies the court, for here the king or governor ordinarily resides. It stands about 150 miles from the sea, upon a great and high mountain, which is almost all of rock, with an iron mine in it. On the top is a large plain, about 10 miles in compass, very well cultivated, and furnished with houses and villages, that are inhabited by 100,000 persons. The top being so well distinguished from the rest of the hill, that the Portuguese call it Otheiro, that is, the Prospect, or Look-out, from whence one may view all the adjacent plains ; only towards the river it is very steep and rocky. Although the top of the hill lies very high, yet it abounds with springs of indifferently good water. This plain is very fruitful in grain, and is well manured ; it has meadows full of grass, and trees that are always green. The air is likewise cool and wholesome.

It is seated at the foot of a mountain, which serves as a defence to it against the tempestuous sea. The harbour lies within two redoubts, between which only one ship can pass at a time. Near its entrance also is a fort, with a garrison. The town is surrounded with walls, besides which it is defended by bastions and half moons, and on the mountain under which it lies, is a citadel. The streets are long, broad, straight, and clean, the houses neat, and the churches fine. It enjoys a delightful prospect, having on one side the sea, and on the other a distant view of the Pyrenean mountains. A considerable trade is carried on in this place, particularly in iron, steel, and wool.

St. Stephen's, or Fort St. Stephen's, p-t. & cap. Washington co. Alabama, on W. bank of the Tombeckbe, nearly 90 miles above Mobile by land, 120 or 130 by the river, 250 S. by W. Huntsville, W. 1,010. Lat. 31. 33. N. It is situated immediately below the first shoal on the Tombeckbe, at the head of schooner navigation ; it is built on very uneven ground, and its situation is healthy. Vessels drawing 4 feet water can go up at all seasons. It was one of the first settled towns in Alabama, and the seat of government before the territory was erected into a state. For a few years it was a flourishing town, having a brisk trade ; but during 4 or 5 years past the prosperity of Mobile has greatly injured St. Stephen's ; as likewise have other towns more recently established higher up the river. The population, in 1817, was estimated at 800, but in 1822, was reduced to 250 or 300. It contains a bank, a printing office, and an academy.

St. Thomas, t. Lower Canada, delightfully situated on S. bank of the St. Lawrence, where it is joined by the Riviere du Sud. Pop. 500. It contains about 90 houses, mostly built of wood, and white washed, and having gardens and orchards attached to them.

St. Thomas, the principal of the Virgin isles in the West Indies, belonging to Denmark. Lon. 64. 55. W. Lat. 18. 22. N. It is 11 miles long, and 2 broad. Pop. in 1815, 5,050; whites 550; free blacks 1,500; slaves 3,000. It abounds with potatoes, millet, manioc, and most sorts of fruits and herbage, especially sugar and tobacco, but is extremely infested with musquitoes and other troublesome vermin. Here are excellent kids, and all sorts of wild fowl, but from the numbers of people, and great plenty of money here, provisions are, as is most commonly the case, dear. Dampier calls it a free port, and a receptacle or sanctuary for privateers. It has a safe and commodious harbour, nearly in the centre of which is a small fort, without ditch or outworks, and the town, which begins 50 or 60 paces west of it, consists chiefly of one long street, at the end of which is the Danish factory. Most of the houses are of brick, being built and tiled in the Dutch fashion, yet but of one story. The trade of this small island, particularly in time of peace, is very considerable.

St. Thomas, island, in the Atlantic, near the coast of Guinea, situated on the equinoctial line, about 40 miles long, and 30 broad. Lon. 6. 55. E. The climate is hot, moist, and unwholesome, especially to Europeans, few of whom ever arrive at the age of 50, though many of the native inhabitants live to complete a full century. The soil is very fertile, and produces the fruits of the climate in great abundance. The island is well watered with fresh rivers and rivulets, of a clear, light, wholesome water, that greatly fertilizes the soil. In the centre is a high mountain, covered with wood and fruit trees, and wrapped in almost perpetual clouds, from which descend a number of rivulets which water the sugar-cane plantations in the valleys at the bottom. All the inhabitants, except a few negroes and slaves, are of the Roman Catholic religion, full of bigotry, superstition, and ignorance. The ecclesiastical government is in the hands of the bishop, a suffragan to the archbishop of Lisbon. Chief town, Povoacon, with 700 houses.

St. Thomas, or St. Thomè de Guiana, or Angustura, city, S. A., capital of Spanish Guiana, on S. side of the Oronoko, about 90 leagues from its mouth. Lon. 62. 16. W. Lat. 8. 8. N. Pop. about 10,000. Bp. see. The streets are well paved, and regularly built, and its climate is pure and healthy, but its port is incommoports consist of oxen, mules, silver, &c. It is situated on a narrow part of the Orinoco, hence its name of Angostura, i. e. the Strait. Opposite to the city is a small village and fortress, called Port Rafael, built for the defence of the passage of the strait. The houses are of one story, built of brick, and have wooden gratings instead of windows. It was once a town of much wealth and commerce, but has greatly declined since it fell into the hands of the patriots. It was lately the seat of the Venezuelan government.

St. Vincent, one of the Caribbee islands in the West Indies, belonging to Great Britain. Lon. 61. 20. W. Lat. 13. 10. N. Pop. in 1805, 18,550; in 1815, 23,493; whites 827; free people of colour 646; slaves 23,493. It is about 40 miles in length, and 10 in breadth. It contains about 84,000 acres, which are every where well watered; but the country is generally mountainous and rugged; the intermediate valleys, however, are fertile in a high degree, the soil consisting chiefly of a fine mould, composed of sand and clay, well adapted for sugar.

The extent of country at present possessed by the British subjects is 23,605 acres; and about as much is supposed to be held by the Charaibes. All the remaining is thought incapable of cultivation or improvement.

The streets are all on uneven ground; the houses uniform, of good height, with balconies in front. Here are several vestiges of antiquity, particularly a Roman road, and a Roman bridge over the Tormes 500 feet long, with 27 arches.

The university of Salamanca, the most celebrated in Spain, was founded in 1239, and is said, (supposed a great exaggeration,) to have once had 8,000 students from various parts of Spain, and 7,000 from other countries. The number of students, in 1787, was stated at 1,909; in 1820, at 300 or 400; the number of professors 61. The buildings are extensive, & the library is said to contain 20,000 volumes. Theology, law, medicine, classics, mathematics, and philosophy are taught here, as well as in the other universities of Spain, much in the same manner as two or three centuries ago. The students are all clad in black gowns, like priests, and have their heads shaved & covered with a cap.

A severe battle was fought near this town, in July 1812, between the French under Marmont, and the allies under Wellington. The French were worsted, losing about 5,000 men in killed and wounded, and 6,000 prisoners.

Salem, s-p. & cap. Essex co. Mass.; 4½ NW. Marblehead, 14 NNE. Boston. 24 S. Newburyport, W. 450. Lon. 70. 54. W. Lat. 42. 34. N. Pop. in 1762, 4,123; in 1790, 7,921; in 1800, 9,457; in 1810, 12,613; in 1820, 12,731: white males, 5,730; white females 6,707: blacks, 295. It is chiefly built on a tongue of land formed by two inlets from the sea, called North and South rivers; over the former of which is a bridge, upwards of 1,500 feet long, connecting Salem with Beverly, and the latter forms the harbour. The harbour has good anchorage, but the water is so shallow that vessels drawing more than 12 or 14 feet must unload, in part, at a distance from the wharfs.

The situation of Salem is low, but pleasant and healthy; it is well built, and with regard to population, wealth, and commerce, is the second town in New England. It contains a court house, a jail, an alms house, a market house, 3 banks, 4 insurance offices, a custom house, a grammar school, an orphan assylum, a bank for savings, a museum, an athenæum containing upwards of 5,000 volumes well selected, and 12 houses of public worship, 6 for Congregationalists, 2 for Baptists, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Friends, 1 for Universalists, and 1 for Roman Catholics. It has numerous public and private schools, which are well supported. None of the public buildings are remarkably splendid. The court house, the market house, the alms house, the custom house, and the grammar school house, all of brick, and the jail of stone, are spacious, handsome, and commodious. The churches are large, neat, and convenient. Three of them are furnished with organs, and 6 with steeples or cupolas. The private houses have generally the appearance of neatness, convenience, and comfort; and many of them indicate taste and opulence. The town was formerly built almost entirely of wood, but a large proportion of the houses erected within the last 20 years, are of brick.

The appearance of Salem is very irregular, the streets having been laid out with little regard to symmetry or beauty. In the northern part of the town there is an elegant common, containing about 10 acres, surrounded by a handsome public walk, which is planted with rows of trees.—On a peninsula below the town there are two forts, Fort Pickering and Fort Lee, and on Baker's island there is a light house.

Salem is, next to Plymouth, the oldest town in the state, and was settled in 1626. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in trade and navigation. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 33,046 tons. The East India trade has, for several years been carried on here with great spirit and advantage, and it is to this branch of commerce that the town is indebted for a great part of its wealth. The number of vessels employed in this trade, amounted, in 1818, to 53, carrying 14,272 tons. There are now living about 160 persons, who, as masters or supercargoes of vessels, have sailed from this town round the Cape of Good Hope or Cape Horn. A society composed of such persons, styled the East India Marine Society, was incorporated in 1801; the object of which is to afford relief to indigent members or their families, to promote the knowledge of navigation and trade to the East Indies, and to increase the museum. The museum belongs to this society, and is a very extensive and interesting cabinet of curiosities collected from all parts of the world, and is visited free of expense.—The Indian name of Salem was Naumkeag, or Naumkeak.

It contains a church, and has manufactures of potters' ware, saddlery, gloves, hosiery, &c. Here is an excellent Moravian academy for females, under the direction of a preceptor, and 12 matrons. There are belonging to the institution, 4 brick buildings, 4 stories high, situated on a square in the centre of the town, planted with trees, and intersected with fine gravel walks. Young ladies from various parts of the southern states are sent to this academy. The price of board and tuition is moderate, and great attention is paid to the morals of the pupils.—Cape Fear bank, at Wilmington, has an agency here.

Salisbury, p-t. & port of entry, Somerset co., Md., between the two principal branches of the Wicomico; 15 ESE. Vienna, W. 137. It contains an Episcopal church, a Methodist meeting house, and about 100 houses, and has considerable trade in lumber.

Salisbury, p-t. & cap. Rowan co., N. C.; 5 SW. of the Yadkin, 34 SW. Salem, 119 WNW. Fayetteville, W. 375. Pop. about 600. It contains a court house, a jail, a bank, an academy, and a church. It is a flourishing town, and is situated in a very fertile country. Near this town there is a remarkable wall of stone, laid in cement, plastered on both sides, from 12 to 14 feet in height, and 22 inches thick. The length of what has been discovered is about 300 feet. The top of the wall approaches within one foot of the surface of the ground. When built, by whom, and for what purpose, is unknown. A similar wall has, within a few years, been discovered, about 6 miles from the first, from 4 to 5 feet high, and 7 inches thick.

Salisbury, or New Sarum, city, Eng., in Wiltshire; 21 NE. Southampton, 83 W. by S. London. Lon. 1. 47. W. Lat. 51. 4. N. Pop. in 1811, 8,224. H. 1,575. Bp. see. It stands in a broad pleasant vale, on the Avon, near its junction with the small rivers Wily and Bourne. The principal streets are regularly laid out, each of them furnished with a channel, through which runs a perpetual stream of water supplied by the Avon. The place consists of two distinct parts, the city and the close. The houses are mostly of brick. The principal buildings and institutions are the cathedral, the bishop's palace, college of matrons, churches, council-house, infirmary, jail, theatre, several hospitals, grammar school, &c. The cathedral is an interesting specimen of the architecture of the 13th century, regarded one of the finest ecclesiastical buildings in Europe, and the most regular Gothic structure in England, built in the form of a lantern, with its spire of free stone in the middle, the tallest in the kingdom, being 410 feet high. Salisbury is noted for its manufacture of cutlery. It send two members to parliament. Market on Tuesday and Saturday.—Natives, Philip Massinger and James Harris.

Salisbury Plain extends from Salisbury, 25 E. to Winchester, and 28 W. to Weymouth. Its breadth in some places is near 30 miles. Numerous flocks of sheep are fed here. The famous Stonehenge, and other antiquities, both British and Roman, are found in this plain. See Stonehenge.

Salmon River, r. N. Y., which rises in Lewis co., flows through Oswego co., and runs into lake Ontario, in SE. corner of Richland, 4 miles below Pulaski. It is a clear and rapid stream, from 15 to 20 rods wide, 60 or 70 miles in length, and received its name from the fishery, there being annually taken in its waters between 1,000 and 2,000 barrels of salmon. Twelve miles above the mouth of the river, there is a remarkable cataract. The water, after moving slowly along for several miles in a body, from 12 to 15 rods wide, overhung by forests of evergreen, is suddenly attracted by the suction of the fall to the brink of the precipice, when it is precipitated in one entire sheet in a cataract of 107 feet perpendicular. The falling stream, the foam and surges below, the rocky and rugged banks on both sides, the ceaseless noise of the waterfall in the midst of a solitary wilderness, form a scene of native grandeur rarely met with. The river is navigable for schooners only $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the lake; its current from the falls to that point being rapid. Boats and rafts, however, pass down at high water.

Salona, s-p. Dalmatia, situated in a small bay of the Adriatic; 6. N. Spalatro. Lon. 16. 44. E. Lat. 43. 26. N. It was destroyed by Augustus, & rebuilt by Tiberius, who sent thither a Roman colony, and made it the capital of Illyricum. At present it is much reduced. This town was the retreat of the emperor Dioclesian.

Salonica, or Saloniki, or Salonichi, (an. Hallia, and Therma; afterwards called by Cassander, who built it anew, Thessalonica,) city & s-p. Eu. Turkey, in Macedonia, at the north extremity of a gulf, to which it gives name; anciently Thermaic gulf; 252 ESE. Ragusa, 272 W. Constantinople. Lon. 22.56.E. Lat. 40.38.N. Pop. 70,000; 35,000 Turks, 20,000 Greeks, 12,000 Jews, and 3,000 Franks. Greek & Cath. abp. see. It is the residence of a pacha, has an excellent commercial position, and of the towns of Eu. Turkey, is second only to Constantinople in point of commerce.

It is pleasantly situated, being built on the declivity of a hill, and the approach to it from the sea is very imposing. The domes and minarets of mosques, together with other buildings, environed with cypresses, give it an air of splendour, but like other Turkish towns, its interior by no means corresponds with its external magnificence. It is situated in the vicinity of a fertile district, and exports cotton, tobacco, corn, and wool.—The ancient walls are nearly entire, and are 5 or 6 miles in circuit, but within them are many void spaces. Of the remains of antiquity the most remarkable are the propylæa of the ancient Hippodrome. The whole sculpture is in marble, and is considered among the finest pieces of art, which have escaped the ravages of time.—To the early Christians in this city, St. Paul addressed two epistles.

Salzburg, or Salzburg, circle, Austria, in Land above the Ens, lying between Bavaria, Tyrol, and Stiria. Pop. 141,699. Sq. m. 2,810. The surface is greatly diversified, consisting partly of a great valley, lying along the river Salz, and partly of a tract of alternate mountains and defiles, including on the south a part of the Noric Alps. The climate is cold for the latitude. It produces some wheat, barley, oats, &c., has extensive pastures, but its chief wealth consists in its minerals; its salt in the north, (see Hallein), and its metals of iron, lead, &c., in the southern mountains.—Salzburg was formerly an archbishopric, the archbishop being a prince of the empire and primate of Germany. On the general secularization in 1802, it was given to the grand duke of Tuscany; in 1806 incorporated with Austria; in 1809 transferred to Bavaria; and in 1814 restored, except a small part, to Austria.

Salzburg, (an Juvavum, and Salisburgum), city, Austria, capital of the above circle, on the Salz; 68 ESE. Munich, 140 WSW. Vienna. Lon. 13. 1. E. Lat. 47. 43. N. Pop. in 1811, 13,066. Abp. see. It has a romantic situation amidst lofty mountains, and contains a cathedral, 6 parish churches, 11 convents and chapels, 3 hospitals, a gymnasium, a lyceum, with a theological and a surgical school, and 2 libraries, one of 36,000, the other of 20,000 volumes. Here was a university founded in 1623, but converted in 1810 into a lyceum. The chief manufacture is hardware.

Samandraki, or Samondrachi, see Samotraki.

Samar, or Samal, one of the Philippine islands, 140 miles long, and about 60 in average breadth, separated by a narrow sea from the SE. extremity of the island of Luçon. In this island the soil is extremely fertile, easily cultivated, and rewards the industry of the labourer with at least forty fold. The iron tree, ebony, and dying wood grow in every part of the island; and gold dust is found, in some quantity, in its interior regions. The natives, especially such as reside on the sea coast, were formerly Mahometans; but the missionary Jesuits converted them to the religion and allegiance of Spain. Lon. 124. 15. to 125. 52. E. Lat. 11. 15. to 12. 45. N.

Samara, t. Irak Arabi, on the Tigris; 60 N. Bagdad. It was formerly important, and in the 9th century, became the residence of several caliphs of the house of Abbas; but has declined, now containing only about 400 houses.

Samarain, or Sermin, t. Syria, in the pachalic of Aleppo; 25 SSW. Aleppo.

Samarang, t. Java, on a river of the same name, near north coast; 240 E. Batavia. Lon. 110. 38. E. Lat. 6. 54. N. Pop. stated at 30,000. It is the principal central station in the island, and is defended by a stone parapet and rampart, with bastions and a wet ditch. The river is navigable for coasting vessels up to the town, but ships are obliged to lie at a distance of 5 or 6 miles from the shore. The town has a neat appearance, and contains a large church, a town house, and other public buildings. The climate, though not very salubrious, is far preferable to that of Batavia. The territorial revenue of Samarang, in 1814, amounted to £56,536; the salt revenue £22,223; opium 2,675; town duties 22,223; total £103,657; besides collections made on edible birds' nests.

Samarcand, city, Independent Tartary, on the Sogd; 100 E. Bukharia, 180 N. Balk. Lon. 64. 9. E. Lat. 39. 38. N. It is supposed to be the Marakanda of the ancients, and was formerly a great city, and capital of Independent Tartary, and in the time of Tamerlane, or Timur, the capital of his empire, which extended over a great part of the continent. It does not appear to have ever equalled in magnitude the great metropolitan cities of India. The population of the city and suburbs was estimated by Clavijo, ambassador from the king of Spain, in 1405, the year of Tamerlane's death, at 150,000. The pomp of Tamerlane's court, and of his numerous palaces, is said to have almost surpassed description.

The city is situated near the borders of a fruitful and verdant plain, which extends west to Bukharia; on the east of the city, at the distance of 2 miles, the hilly country commences. The climate is delightful. The city has had a great trade with Russia, Tartary, India, Turkey, and China; and has been celebrated as a seat of Mahometan learning. Though long reduced from its ancient importance, yet its present condition is not known, no European traveller having for a long time visited it. Not only has Independent Tartary ceased to rule over the rest of Asia, but Samarcand has ceased to be the capital of this region; Bukharia now holding the first place, both as a metropolitan city and a school of learning.

Sana, (an. Sabatha,) city, Arabia, cap. Yemen, and residence of the Imam; 128 NNE. Mocha. Lon. 44. 9. E. Lat. 15. 21. N. It is situated in a barren and stony valley, encircled by lofty hills; but its immediate vicinity is beautifully diversified by woods and gardens. It is surrounded by a strong mud wall, and has a military force ordinarily consisting of 4,000 infantry and 1,000 cavalry. Sir Henry Middleton describes it as somewhat larger than Bristol in England, but probably not so populous, as it contains many gardens within its walls. It has many handsome stone houses, with others well built of brick; and said to be among the handsomest cities of Asia. There are 12 baths, many palaces, and simsoras or caravansaries. Fruits are plentiful, especially grapes, great quantities of which are dried and exported.—The Jews, in number about 2,000, live by themselves, in a village called Kaa el Ihud.

Sandwich Islands, cluster of islands in the Pacific ocean, discovered by captain Cook and captain King, in the year 1778. They had been previously discovered by a Spanish vessel, and named Los Monjes. Since the discovery by captain Cook, they have been visited by various navigators. This group consists of 11 islands, extending in Lat. from 18. 54. to 22. 15. N., and in Lon. from 199. 36. to 205. 6. E. The names of the islands, their length, breadth, square miles, and population, as estimated by captain King, are exhibited in the following table:

	Length.	Breadth	Sq. m.	Pop.
Owhyhee	97	78	4,000	150,000
Mowee	48	29	600	65,400
Tahoorowa	11	8	60
Ranai	17	9	110	20,400
Morotoi	40	7	170	36,000
Woahoo	46	23	520	60,200
Atooi	33	28	520	54,000
Oneehow	20	7	80	10,000
Oreehoua
Tahoora	1	$\frac{1}{2}$		4,000

400,000

Mowee is 30 NW. Owhyhee; Morotoi 10 WNW Mowee; Tahoorowa 7 SSW. Mowee; Ranai 9 W. Mowee; Woahoo 27 WNW. Morotoi; Atooi 75 WNW. Woahoo; Oneehow 17 WSW. Atooi; Tahoora 27 SW. Oneehow. Besides the above there are 2 other uninhabited islands, Morokinne and Modoopapapa or Kamodoopapapa.

The climate of the Sandwich islands differs very little from that of the West Indian islands, which lie in the same latitude. It may, perhaps, be rather more temperate. In the year 1778, according to captain King, the thermometer, on shore, in Karakakooa bay, never rose higher than 88; its mean height at noon was 83. In Wymoa bay, its mean height at noon was 76, and when out at sea 75. The mean height of the thermometer at noon, in Jamaica, is about 86, at sea 80.—The quadrupeds in these, as well as in all other islands that have been discovered in the South sea are confined to 3 sorts; dogs, hogs, and rats. The birds are beautiful and numerous, though not various. The vegetable productions are nearly the same with the rest of the South sea islands. The bread fruit trees thrive here; not in such abundance, but produce double the quantity they do on the rich plains of Otaheite. The sugar canes are of very unusual size.

The inhabitants are undoubtedly of the same race with those of New Zealand, the Society and Friendly islands, Easter island, and the Marquesas. The natives of these islands are in general above the middle size, and well made; they walk very gracefully, run nimbly, and are capable of bearing great fatigue; though, upon the whole, the men are somewhat inferior, in point of strength and activity, to the Friendly islanders; and the women less delicately limbed than those of Otaheite. Their complexion is rather darker than that of the Otaheiteans, and they are not altogether so handsome a people; however, many of both sexes have fine open countenances; and the women, in particular, have good eyes and teeth, and a sweetness and sensibility of look which render them very engaging. Their hair is of a brownish black. In their general conduct they are of the most mild and affectionate disposition; equally remote from the extreme levity and fickleness of the Otaheiteans, and the distant gravity and reserve of the inhabitants of the Friendly islands. They appear to live in the utmost harmony and friendship with one another. Their natural capacity seems in no respect below the common standard of mankind. Their improvements in agriculture, and the perfection of their manufactures, are adequate to the circumstances of their situation, and the natural advantages they enjoy. "The eager curiosity," says captain King, "with which they attended the armourer's forge, and the many expedients they had invented, even before we left the islands, for working the iron they had procured from us, into such forms as were best adapted to their purposes, were strong proofs of docility and ingenuity." The sacrificing human victims was universally practised among these islanders, and their religion, in most of its principal features, resembles that of the Society and Friendly islands.

After the visit of captain Cook these islands were involved in a series of destructive wars, in consequence of the rival chiefs for the undivided sovereignty of the whole. The result of these contests was to place the principal dominion in the hands of Tamaahmah, king of Owhyhee, a sagacious, enterprising, and ambitious chief. The keel of the first vessel of Tamaahmah's navy was laid down by Vancouver in 1794; in 1802, when visited by captain Turnbull, he had upwards of 20 vessels from 25 to 70 tons; some of them copper bottomed; and in 1810, he had 60 decked vessels, and had reduced all the islands under his dominion, except Atooi and Oneehow. He encouraged commerce, introduced various European trades and mechanical arts, and during his reign, his subjects made rapid progress in civilization. In 1819, this able chief died and was succeeded by his son Reho-reho; and the same year the government and people almost unanimously agreed to abandon their idolatrous worship, and burn their idols. The practice not only of idol worship had been universal, but also the sacrifice of human victims. The American Board of Commissioners has established a mission on these islands. The mission, consisting of 22 persons, viz. 2 ordained missionaries, 2 catechists and school masters, a printer, a farmer, and families, together with 3 natives of the Sandwich islands, who had been educated at the school in Cornwall, Ct., left Boston, Oct. 1819, and became established in the islands in April 1820, with favourable prospects of being useful. George Tamoree, son of Tamoree, king of Atooi, educated at the school at Cornwall, also accompanied the missions. Two other missionaries are about to be sent by the same board to these islands.

Santa Fé, or Santa Fez, or Santa Fé de Grenada, city, America, capital of New Mexico, on E. side of the del Norte; 1,020 NW. New Orleans, 1,131 NNW. Mexico. Lon. 104. 52. W. Lat. 36. 12. N. Pop. 3,600. It is a bishop's see and residence of a governor; founded in the beginning of the 17th century, about the time that the count of Monterey was viceroy in Mexico. It is garrisoned by 500 men, and is situated in one of the finest countries in America; about 489 miles from the port of San Francisco, on the Pacific ocean. By some it is called New Mexico.—This place is now frequently visited by traders from the upper part of Arkansas Territory. For three years preceding 1822, there is said to have been no rain here. The fields are watered from the waters of the Del Norte and other rivers.

Santa Fé de Antioquia, t. New Grenada, cap. of a province of the same name, on the Cauca; 200 S. Carthagena, 280 N. Popayan. Lon. 74. 36. W. Lat. 6. 48. N. It abounds in gold mines, cattle, and fruits, but has little commerce.

Santa Fé de Bogota, t. S. A., & cap. of New Grenada. Lon. 74.15.W. Lat. 4.36.N. Pop. 30, or 40,000. It is situated on the banks of a little river, which falls into the Magdalena. It was made an archbishop's see by pope Julius III., in 1554. The city is large and beautiful, and has 4 public squares. The streets are wide & well paved. It has a magnificent cathedral. Here is a college, which belonged to the regulars of the company of Jesuits, said to be one of the most sumptuous buildings ever devoted to religious purposes. Here are also 3 other churches, 8 convents, 4 nunneries, a hospital, a mint, 3 colleges for students, and a university founded in 1621, having a large public library, which was established in 1772. Here is a sovereign court of judicature, the president of which was governor of the whole province of New Grenada.—The temperature is mild, and the city may be said to enjoy a constant spring. Two crops of the same fruits are produced here twice a year in abundance, and there are regularly 2 harvests.

H. 4,700. Abp. see. It was founded by the Phœnicians who called it Saldua, or Saldivia; but being enlarged by Augustus it took the name of Cæsar Augusta, corrupted subsequently into Saragossa. The country around consists of a vast and fertile plain, and the immediate vicinity of gardens. The city is approached both on the east and west by the canal of Aragon, which extends 100 miles in a line nearly parallel with the Ebro. It is not regularly fortified, but is surrounded by an earthen wall, and entered by 12 gates. Here are 2 bridges across the Ebro.

The streets, except one, called the Cozo, which is long and wide, are narrow and crooked. The houses are of brick, seldom more than 3 stories high. It contains a cathedral, 17 churches, about 40 convents, 2 small public libraries, a university, &c. The collegiate church of our Lady of the Pillar is remarkable for its supposed miraculous image, here in great repute. The university was founded in 1471, and had, in 1786, 42 professors and 2,000 students. It is the residence of the intendant, captain general, and high court of justice of Aragon.—Saragossa is rendered famous by its desperate resistance against the French, in two sieges, the first in the summer of 1808; the 2d commenced Dec. 20, 1808; and after a bombardment of 6 weeks the city surrendered.

In 1818, the old township of Saratoga was divided into two, the eastern part being called Saratoga, and the western Saratoga Springs.

Saratoga Springs, p-t. Saratoga co. N. Y.; 12 W. of the Hudson, 7 NE. Ballston, 32 N. Albany, W. 398. Pop. 1,909. The celebrated mineral springs are spread over a tract of country, about 12 miles in extent, in Saratoga co., and are known by different local names. The most noted are those of Saratoga and Ballston, which are the most celebrated mineral waters in the United States. They are strongly impregnated with carbonic acid, and contain also carbonate of soda, muriate of soda, super-carbonated lime, and a carbonate of iron. They are much frequented, during the warm months, by gay and fashionable people, as well as by invalids. The principal springs are Congress Spring, Rock Spring, and Columbia Spring. Here is a large, handsome, and flourishing village, with a post office, a Presbyterian church, and boarding-houses, which afford excellent accommodations for visitors.

Sardinia, isl. in the Mediterranean, S. of Corsica. Lon. 7. 57. to 9. 51. E. Lat. 35. 55 to 41. 17. N.; 162 miles long from N. to S.; and about 60 broad. Sq. m. 9,120. Pop. 520,000. It is divided into two geographical divisions, Capo di Cagliari, the southern division, and Capo di Sassari, the northern. Chief towns, Cagliari and Sassari.

The surface presents a pleasing variety of hill and dale. The soil is tolerably fertile, but badly cultivated. It produces wheat, vines, olives, mulberries, lemons, oranges, figs, &c. Hogs, sheep, and goats are very numerous. The climate is not subject to so great extremes of heat and cold as continental countries under the same parallels of latitude. The winters are mild; but the summers in some parts are rendered unhealthy by marsh vapours. It is favourably situated for commerce, having a number of good harbours, as Cagliari, Palmas, and Nova. The exports consist of salt, corn, cattle, salted provisions, fish, hides, skins, fruit, wine, brandy, &c., amounting to about £500,000.

There are 2 universities, at Cagliari and Sassari, but their course of education is very imperfect. The Sardinian language has the Italian for its basis, with a mixture of Spanish, Latin, Greek, and French words and idioms. In the towns on the sea coast the inhabitants, though possessed of little information, are pleasant in their manners, and have considerable vivacity, but the interior exhibits a degree of barbarism, which can hardly be believed to exist in Europe.—The island was called by the Greeks Ichnusa, Sandialotis, and Sardo.

SARDINIA, km. Europe, within the limits of Italy, comprising the island of Sardinia and the following continental territories, for an account of which see the several articles.

Divisions.	Sq. m.	Pop.

Genoese Territory.....	2,360.....	534,000
Duchy of Montferrat.....	900.....	186,000
Savoy.....	3,800.....	450,000
Island of Sardinia.....	9,120.....	520,000
	27,390	4,000,000

Towns. Turin is the capital. The other chief towns are Genoa, Alexandria, Cagliari, Sassari, Nice, Coni, Vercelli, and Mondovi.

Government &c. The government is monarchy with few definite limits. The royal title, is king of Sardinia, Cyprus, and Jerusalem, and duke of Genoa. The inhabitants may be divided into four classes, noblesse, clergy, inhabitants of the towns, and peasantry. The revenue is about £1,500,000; the standing army 60,000 men; also a national militia of 40,000. The religion is Roman Catholic. There are two universities in the continental states, Turin and Genoa. Primary schools have heretofore been on a very imperfect footing, but in 1815 the system of Bell and Lancaster was introduced.

Savannah, r. U. S., which is formed by the union of the Tugeloo and Keowee. It separates S. Carolina from Georgia, and runs SE. into the Atlantic. It is navigable for large vessels to the town of Savannah, 17 miles, and for boats of 100 feet keel to Augusta, which, by the course of the river, is 340 miles above Savannah. Just above Augusta there are falls; beyond these the river is navigable for boats to the junction of the Tugeloo and Keowee.

Savannah, city, & port of entry, Chatham co. Georgia, on SW. bank of the Savannah, 17 m. from its mouth; 118 SW. Charleston, 123 SE. Augusta, 160 ESE. Milledgeville, W. 658. Lon. 81. 10. W. Lat. 32. 8. N. Pop., in 1810, 5,195; in 1820, 7,523; slaves 3,175; free blacks 582. It is situated on a sandy plain, elevated about 40 feet above low tide, and contains a court-house, a jail, an alms-house, a hospital, a theatre, a public library, an academy, an exchange, 3 banks, including a branch of the U. S. bank; and 7 houses of public worship, 1 for Presbyterians, 1 for Episcopalians, 1 for Lutherans, 1 for Methodists, 1 for Baptists, 1 for Roman Catholics, & a Jewish synagogue.

The academy is built of brick and stone, 180 feet by 60, of 3 stories. The exchange is a brick edifice of 5 stories. The new Presbyterian church, recently erected, is a very spacious and elegant edifice of stone. The city a few years since was almost wholly built of wood, with very few elegant houses, but a large proportion of the houses recently erected, are handsomely built of brick. Savannah has heretofore been accounted very unhealthy during the summer and autumn, but the salubrity of the place is now much improved by appropriating to a dry culture, those lands in its immediate vicinity, which were formerly appropriated to the culture of rice.

The city is regularly laid out, and contains 10 public squares, each consisting of 2 acres, with a pump in the centre. The squares and public walks are planted with china trees, which contribute much to the ornament, comfort, and salubrity of the place. Savannah is the great emporium of the state, and is a place of much trade. In 9 months, ending June 30, 1817, there were exported 107,320 bales of cotton, 3,605 hhds. of tobacco, 11,228 tierces of rice; total value $9,966,503: and in six months, ending the 31st of March 1818, 61,797 bales of cotton, 13,680 tierces of rice, and 1,500 hhds. of tobacco. The shipping belonging to this port, in 1821, amounted to 10,826 tons. Vessels drawing 14 feet of water come up to the wharfs; larger vessels take in their cargoes at Five Fathom Hole, 3 miles below the town. On the east side of the city is Fort Wayne; at Five Fathom Hole is Fort Jackson; and on Tybee island, near the mouth of the river, there is a light-house. On the 10th Jan. 1820, 463 buildings were destroyed in this city by fire. The damage was estimated at $4,000,000. The part burnt has been since mostly rebuilt with brick, in an improved style.

Savoy, p-t. Berkshire co. Mass. ; 25 NE. Lenox, 120 W. Boston, W. 410. Pop. 852.

Savoy, duchy, Europe, forming NW. part of the continental dominions of the king of Sardinia ; bounded N. & E. by Switzerland, S. by Piedmont and France, and W. by France ; 94 miles long from N. to S., and from 60 to 70 broad. Pop. 449,487. Sq. m. 3,800. It is divided into 6 districts, Chamberry, Genevois, Chablais, Faucigny, Tarantaise, and Maurienne. Chief town, Chamberry.

The surface is in the highest degree bleak & rugged ; mountains, rocks, precipices, cascades, & forests are its characteristic features. Among the mountains are Mont Blanc, Mount St. Bernard, Mount Cenis, Mount Iseran, Mount Valais, and Mount Toumet. The rivers are the Rhone, Isere, Arve, and Arc.

Savoy is naturally one of the poorest countries in Europe, but by industry and careful cultivation, the inhabitants gain a comfortable subsistence. The valleys produce wheat, oats, barley, rye, and hemp ; the sides of mountains are covered with pasture, and in favourable situations, with vines. The mountains contain mines of iron, copper, and silver. The chief exports are cheese, butter, hemp, tanned skins, wool, &c.

The Savoyards have the characteristics of an uninstructed and an uncorrupted people—frugality, sobriety, frankness, probity, and credulity. They are of a brown complexion, and frequently troubled with the goitre.—The name of Savoy is derived from the Latin Sabaudia, which anciently formed a part of Gallia Norbonensis.

Saxony, (Land or Province of,) or Saxonland, pr. Transylvania, comprising the south part, bordering on Turkey. Pop. 358,516. Sq. m. 3, or 4,000. It is divided into 2 districts, Cronstadt and Bistritz. The inhabitants are chiefly Lutherans. Their ancestors migrated in the 12th century from the borders of the Lower Rhine, then called Saxony. They retain their ancient customs, language, and laws.

Saxony, (Lower,) formerly a circle of Germany, bounded N. by Sleswick and the Baltic, E. by Upper Saxony, S. by Upper Saxony and Upper Rhine, and W. by Westphalia and the German sea. It comprised the electorate of Hanover, the duchies of Mecklenburg, Brunswick, and Holstein, the free towns of Hamburg, Bremen, and Lubeck, with a number of small states. Sq. m. 26,000.

Saxony, (Upper,) formerly a circle of Germany, bounded N. by the Baltic, E. by Poland, Silesia, and Lusatia, S. by Bohemia and Franconia, and W. and NW. by Lower Saxony. Pop. about 4,000,000. Sq. m. about 43,000. It comprised the electorates of Saxony and Brandenburg, the duchy of Pomerania, and a number of small principalities.—Wittenberg was the capital of the electorate or duchy of Saxony. The surface of both circles is generally level; that of Upper Saxony somewhat more elevated than Lower.

SAXONY, km. Europe, toward the NE. of Germany, bounded N. and NE. by the Prussian territories, S. by Bohemia, and W. by the territories of Reuss, Gotha, and Prussia; 140 miles long from E. to W.; greatest breadth 75. It was erected into a kingdom by the treaty of Posen, Dec. 11, 1806. Previous to 1814 it contained above 2,000,000 inhabitants, exclusive of a part of Poland then subject to this crown; but it was greatly reduced by the congress of Vienna, and is now the smallest kingdom in Europe, and comprises only about one sixth part of the late circle of Upper Saxony. The following table exhibits the extent and population according to Hassel.

Circles.	Sq. m.	Pop.	Capitals.	Pop.
Meissen.....	1,600	297,945	Dresden...	45,000
Leipsic.....	1,537	216,917	Leipsic...	32,492

Upper Lusatia	1,173	169,879	Bautzen...	10,000

7,182 1,233,259

Towns. The other principal towns, besides the above, are Chemnitz, Zittau, Meissen, Ebersbach, and Schneeberg.

Face of the country, &c. The surface is much diversified; on the south it is separated from Bohemia by the Erzgebirg mountains, a part of the Sudetic chain; the northern part is more level. The rivers are the Elbe, the Pleisse, the two Elsters, the two Muldas, and the Queiss. The plains and valleys are well cultivated, and produce wheat, barley, oats, and other grain; some hops, tobacco, &c. The mountains abound in various minerals, as iron, copper, lead, arsenic, cobalt, antimony, manganese, zinc, sulphur, alum, vitriol, borax, porcelain clay, fuller's earth, topazes, cornelians, &c.

Manufactures. Saxony ranks among the most manufacturing countries in Europe. The manufactures consist of linen, woollens, cotton, leather, paper, and articles from the mines. The exports consist of minerals, wool, woollen goods, linen, yarn, and lace. Leipsic is the principal place of trade.

Religion, &c. The religion of the great majority is Lutheran, but the reigning family, since 1697, has been Catholic. Leipsic is the only university; Halle now belongs to Prussia. Saxony is famous for its literature and for the purity with which the German language is here spoken. In no country in Europe, except Scotland and Pays de Vaud, are the lower classes so generally taught to read and write.

Government, &c. The government is monarchy, but the king shares the legislative power with the states, composed of 2 houses, the prelates and nobles in one, and the country gentry and deputies of the towns in the other.—The revenue is stated at about £1,000,000 sterling; the national debt at £3,700,000; the military force at 12,000 men.

Saxony, Prussian province, formed of most of the cessions made by the kingdom of Saxony to Prussia at the congress of Vienna, together with other territories north of Anhalt and west of the Elbe and Havel. It is divided into the 3 following governments.

	Sq. m.	Pop.	Capitals.
Magdeburg....	4,340.....	472,012....	Magdeburg
Merseburg....	3,964.....	501,868....	Merseburg
Erfurt.....	1,420.....	240,339....	Erfurt

9,724 1,214,219

The population including the military is stated, according to Cannabich, at 1,214,219. Hassel states it without the military, at 1,148,041.—Magdeburg is the capital of the province. The other principal towns besides Erfurt and Magdeburg are Halle, Halberstadt, Stendal, Wittenberg, Naumburg, Muhlhausen, and Nordhausen. The surface is mostly level, the only hills consisting of a part of the Hartz, and of a detached portion of the Thuringian forest. The soil various, in some places dry and sandy, in others a heavy loam, and well cultivated; the productions grain, hemp, flax, &c. Salt is obtained in great quantities from brine springs in the government of Merseburg.

Saybrook, p-t. Middlesex co. Ct., on W. side of the Connecticut, near its mouth, opposite to Lyme; 18 W. New London, 34 E. New Haven, W. 338. Lon. 72. 24. W. Lat. 41. 18. N. Pop. 4,165. It contains 4 parishes, in each of which is a Congregational meeting house; and there are in the township 4 other houses of public worship, 2 for Baptists, 1 for Episcopalians, and 1 for Methodists. This town has some trade in the fisheries, and there are 30 vessels employed chiefly in the coasting trade. At the village of Pettipaug, 8 miles above the mouth of the river, ship-building is carried on extensively. Large quantities of ivory combs and ivory button moulds are manufactured in this town. Here is a ferry across the river. Saybrook is one of the oldest towns in Connecticut. Lords Say and Seal and Brook, having purchased the tract of land upon the mouth of the river, caused a fort to be built here in 1635, and 1639 the town was settled, and named Saybrook, in honour of the proprietors.

The sand-bank called Scagen's Reef, or Scaggerac, or Grenan, extends itself from Cape Skagen, a great way into the sea, on which account a large coal fire is constantly kept up there in the winter nights, as a mark for ships to avoid it. For this purpose, in the year 1753, a new tower, 64 feet high, was erected opposite to this sand-bank, on the spot where the former light-house stood, which had been demolished by the violence of the sea. The Scaggerac sea forms the communication between the German ocean and the Cattegat.

Diarbekir. Lon. 48. 45. E. Lat. 40. 27. N. It was formerly large, populous, and commercial, but the city known to early travellers by this name, is now ruined, and its remains covered by thick brushwood. The present city, called New Schamichi, is 800 paces long, of quadrangular form, the walls of unburnt brick, in tolerable repair, and surrounded by a deep, broad ditch. During the late civil war it was captured and destroyed by Aga Mahommed; previous to this it was supposed to contain 6,000 inhabitants. Of the old city 6,000 houses were destroyed by an earthquake.

Scamander, or Xanthus, r. which watered

Troas, passing by the city of Troy. According to Homer it was called Xanthus by the gods, and Scamander by men, and has its rise in Mount Ida. It is now a small rivulet called Mender, rises in the extremity of the plain of Troy, after a course of 6 or 7 miles, unites with the Simois, and the united stream pursuing a course of 3 miles, flows into the sea, 1½ N. It is much noted and frequented for its mineral waters and sea bathing; is well built, and esteemed a charming summer retreat. The quay is very convenient, and the harbour reckoned the best between Newcastle and the Humber. The tonnage of the shipping belonging to the port is about 30,000; the exports, corn, butter, hams, bacon, and salt fish. But the wealth of this town must be chiefly ascribed to the numbers of people, of all ranks, that flock hither in the hottest months of the year, to drink its waters, which are purgative and diuretic. In this town there were formerly 3 monasteries. Scarborough has 2 markets weekly, on Thursday and Saturday, and sends 2 members to parliament.

It is situated on SE. side of the Mohawk, and on the Erie canal, on a handsome plain ; it is regularly laid out, and contains a court-house, a jail, a bank, a college, an academy for young ladies, and 5 houses of public worship. A weekly newspaper is published here. An elegant bridge, 997 feet in length, is built in this place across the Mohawk. In 1819, November 17th, about 100 buildings were destroyed here by fire.

Union College is situated on east side of the city, on a spot of ground considerably elevated, and commanding a delightful prospect. It was incorporated in 1794, and is a very respectable and flourishing seminary. The buildings are 2 elegant brick edifices, each 200 feet in length, and 4 stories high, having each two wings extending 156 feet, and 2 boarding houses. These buildings contain upwards of 100 rooms for the accommodation of students, rooms for the philosophical and chemical apparatus, lecture rooms, &c., and accommodations for the officers of the college with their families. The library contains about 5,000 volumes. The philosophical apparatus and the chemical are complete. The college is richly endowed, and the present buildings constitute but a part of the plan contemplated, and expected, before long, to be carried into execution.

The executive government is entrusted to a president, 5 professors, 1 of moral philosophy and logic, 1 of mathematics and natural philosophy, 1 of chemistry and belles lettres, 1 of the Latin and Greek languages, and 1 of the modern languages, and 3 tutors. The number of students, in 1820, was 245.

Commencement is held on the 4th Wednesday in July. There are 8 vacations ; the first from commencement, 7 weeks, the second from the Wednesday immediately preceding Christmas, 3 weeks, the third from the 1st Wednesday in April, 3 weeks.—There is connected with the college an academy containing about 100 students.

Schiras, or Sheeraz, city, Persia, capital of Farsistan ; 120 E. by N. Bushire, 160 S. by E. Ispahan, 250 E. Bassora. Lon. 52. 44. E. Lat. 29. 37. N. Pop. usually stated at about 40,000. Morier stated the houses, in 1808-9, at 12,000, 5 persons to a house, 60,000 ; but in his second journey, in 1815-16, stated at only 19,000. It is situated between two mountains, on a plain of unrivalled beauty and fertility, the boast of Persia, upwards of 20 miles long, and 12 broad. The environs are laid out in magnificent gardens, the flowers and fruits of which form a favourite theme of eastern poetry.—Hafiz, the Anacreon of the east, was a native of Schiras, and composed most of his productions in these delightful retreats. His tomb is about half a mile from the city.

The appearance of Schiras, among the beautiful scenery around it, is rather pleasing than grand. The lofty domes and mosques, discovered from afar amid the trees, diversify and enrich the view. The city is about 6 miles in circuit ; but the walls have been suffered to fall to ruin. The internal aspect presents a striking contrast with the exterior. The narrow, winding, and dirty streets, and the paltry houses, excite no idea answering to the second city of Persia, and one of the most celebrated in the east. Its magnificence consists solely in a few public buildings, of which the most remarkable is the great bazar, about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile long, built of yellow burnt brick, arched at the top, and allotted to the different traders in the city. The ark or citadel, the residence of the governor, is a fortified square of 80 yards. The royal palace within is far from being an elegant structure. Schiras still carries on an extensive commerce, which consists chiefly in receiving from Bushire the spices and cotton goods of India, and transmitting them to Ispahan and Yezd. The sides of the hills, which bound the plain of Schiras, produce a wine, which has the highest reputation of any in the east.—Schiras is an ancient city, and has heretofore been the capital of the Persian empire, but exhibits no ruins similar to those of Persepolis, Shapour, and Susa, to attest its former greatness.

Scilly Islands, cluster of islands at the entrance of the English channel, situated due west from the Lizard Point, and seen in a clear day from the Land's End, 30 m. distant. The rocks about the islands, especially those to the westward, appear off at sea like old castles and churches. Five only are inhabited. St. Mary's is the largest, containing 1,271 inhabitants. Its greatest length is $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles, and its breadth $1\frac{1}{2}$. The hills are rocky, rising in some places to a great height, and abound in mineral ores. This island is defended by a strong garrison, situated upon the W. part of it, overlooking the town & isthmus, and commanding the country that way, and to the sea about the batteries, of which there are several strong ones, mounted with 64 pieces of cannon, some of them 18 pounders. About a mile SW. of the south part of St. Mary's garrison, lies St. Agnes' island, otherwise called the Light House Island, upon which stands a very high and strong light house, seen in the night at a great distance. St. Agnes contains 244 inhabitants, Tresco 465, Brehar 111, and St. Sampson 32. Lon. 6.0. to 6.30.W. Lat. 49.54. to 50.2. N.

Scio, or Skio, or Saki, (an. Chios), isl. in the Archipelago, near the coast of Natolia, S. of Mytelene, and W. of Smyrna; 30 miles long, and from 10 to 18 broad. Sq. m. 508. Pop. stated by Pococke at 100,000; by Olivier at 110,000; by Turner at 150,000; and by the bishop, in 1820, to the missionaries, Fisk and Parsons, at only 60, or 70,000; 3,000 Turks, 800 or 900 Catholics, a few Jews, the rest Greeks. There were said to be 5, or 600 Greek churches, about the same number of priests, only 5 or 6 of whom ever preached.

The island is composed of high, & in many parts rugged and rocky mountains, but these by the industry of the inhabitants are rendered very productive. A plain, extending some leagues around the town of Scio, is celebrated for its beauty and fertility, and is occupied by country houses and gardens, filled with lemon and orange trees. The mountains are composed chiefly of reddish marble, streaked with white. The exports consist chiefly of damask & other silks, lemons, oranges, and mastic. The last is a production almost peculiar to Scio, and with it the island supplies almost exclusively Constantinople. Scio also produces corn, cotton, and figs; and mulberry trees are extensively cultivated, and its turpentine is held in estimation.—This beautiful island was ravaged and laid waste by the Turks, in June 1822. A great part of the inhabitants were slain; the rest taken captives, and reduced to slavery.

Scio, s-p. & capital of the island of the same name, in the Grecian Archipelago. Lon. 26.3.E. Lat. 38.30. N. Pop. according to Turner, 35,000. Bp. see. Greek churches, 50 or 60. Scio, before its destruction by the Turks, in 1822, was esteemed the modern Athens, having a college, the most distinguished in Greece, with a library of 30,000 volumes; the number of students, in 1820, was 700 or 800; 14 instructors,—1 professor of chemistry and rhetoric, 1 of mathematics, 1 of theology, geometry, &c., 1 of the Turkish language, 1 of the Latin and French, and 9 teachers of ancient and modern Greek. Tuition was afforded gratis to all the pupils, a considerable proportion of whom were instructed in the first principles of grammar.—The harbour, which is none of the best, is the rendezvous of all shipping going or returning between Constantinople, Syria, & Egypt. The houses are high, all of masonry, the greater part of hewn stone. It is a well built town, & defended by a citadel, with a considerable garrison.

Pop. 528,200. H. 60,294. Sq. m. 6,530.

A chain of mountains extends almost through the whole length from east to west, covered with forests. The rest of the country, with the exception of some marshes, consists of fine plains, with a fertile soil, and a climate almost as mild as that of Italy. The productions are wheat, barley, maize, flax, hemp, and madder; also vines, chestnuts, plums, figs, almonds, &c. It is a backward and ill cultivated country, having by reason of its situation, suffered much from the ravages of war. Less than half of the inhabitants consist of Sclavonians proper; there are Hungarians, Germans, &c. The majority are of the Greek church, but there are many Catholics. Chief town, Eszeck.

Alexander I. founded an abbey for Augustine monks here, in 1114, before which Scone was a place of consequence, and the chief residence of the kings as early as Kenneth II. The palace is pleasantly situated, and surrounded by fine plantations, and is in a style of building, which prevailed 2 centuries ago, more remarkable for strength than elegance. It has a large dining room and a gallery 155 feet long, and 18 broad. There are also other antiquities. The village is regularly built, consisting of 2 broad streets.

SCOTLAND, country, Europe, which, united with England and Wales, forms the northern division of Great Britain, and is often called North Britain; bounded on all sides by the sea, except on the southeast, where it is joined to England. Lon., including the islands, between 1. and 5. W. Lat. 54. to 61. 12. N. Length 275 miles; breadth from 36 to 147. Sq. m. exclusive of bays, 26,014; including the Hebrides, Orkney, and Shetland islands, 30,234; or 18,944,000 English acres; of which 5,043,450 are cultivated, 13,900,550 uncultivated lands; besides 634 sq. m. of lakes and rivers.

Divisions. Scotland is formed by the Grampian mountains into two parts, Highlands and Lowlands, and is divided into 33 shires or counties; 17 chiefly lying in the Lowlands, viz. Berwick, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Wigton, Ayr, Renfrew, Lanark, Peebles, Haddington, Edinburgh, Linlithgow, Stirling, Dumbarton, Clackmannan, and Kinross: 16 chiefly in the Highlands, viz. Fife, Forfar, Perth, Argyll, Kincardine, Aberdeen, Banff, Elgin, Nairn, Inverness, Ross, Sutherland, Caithness, Cromarty, Orkney Islands, and Bute. These are subdivided into 877 parishes.

Population, in 1801, 1,599,068; in 1811, 1,805,688; in 1821, 2,092,014.

Towns. The chief towns are Edinburgh, the capital, Glasgow, Dundee, Aberdeen, Paisley, Greenock, Perth, Dunfermline, Inverness, and Falkirk.

Face of the country. Scotland is of a most diversified surface. In the northern part it is mostly mountainous and barren, while towards the south it extends into fertile plains. It is divided into 2 parts, the Highlands, in the north, and Lowlands in the south or southeast, the Grampian mountains being the dividing line. The northern division consists in great part of an assemblage of vast and dreary mountains, with some fertile valleys intervening. The southern division is greatly diversified with verdant plains, gently rising hills and bending vales, mountains, craggy rocks, and tumbling torrents.

Rivers and lakes. The rivers are numerous, and generally rapid and precipitous; the principal ones are the Spey, Tay, Clyde, Forth, Tweed, Dee, and Don. The lakes or lochs are numerous and celebrated for their picturesque scenery; the chief are Loch Lomond, Loch Aw, Loch Fine, Loch Tay, Loch Ness, Loch Shin, Loch Lochay, Loch Naver, Loch Leven, &c.

Climate. The climate is healthy but very variable; and on account of its insular situation, the cold is not so intense as in similar latitudes on the continent. The greatest height of the thermometer observed at Edinburgh, is 92 deg. Fahrenheit; the lowest (Dec. 31, 1783,) 3 deg. below zero. The general average quantity of rain 31 or 32 inches. Estimated number of days of rain or snow on the west coast 205; fair 160: on the east coast from an average of 12 years, rainy 111, snowy 24, fair 230.

Soil and productions. The soil is inferior to that of England. In the northern part a great proportion of it is unproductive, but in the southern division a large part of the soil is fertile and very productive. Agriculture is here carried to a high state of improvement. The productions are wheat, rye, barley, oats, peas, beans, potatoes, turnips, apples, &c. Scotland feeds vast herds of cattle, and its mountains are covered with sheep. The mineral productions are iron, lead, copper, coal, marble, limestone, freestone, slate, gems, precious stones, &c.

Trade and manufactures. Scotland carries on almost every species of manufacture. The manufactures of cotton, linen, and iron are very extensive; also glass, leather, brewing, shipbuilding, &c. This country had formerly but little foreign trade. In the time of Cromwell the shipping amounted to only 93 vessels, carrying 2,724 tons; of late the annual average number of vessels amounts to 2,509. The principal ports are Greenock, Leith, Aberdeen, Dundee, and Montrose. The revenue in 1810, amounted to £4,188,814; in 1814, to £4,483,014.

Government. Scotland was united with England into one monarchy in 1603. It is represented in the British parliament by 16 peers, elected for every new parliament by the peerage; and by 45 commoners, 30 representing the counties, and 15 the boroughs. The number of Scotch peers, at the time of the union, was 159; in 1811, only 82.

Religion. The established religion of Scotland is Presbyterian, and comprises 15 synods, comprehending 78 presbyteries, 899 parishes, with 938 established clergymen. The general assembly is the highest ecclesiastical court, and meets annually in May, and sits 10 days. It is a representative body, composed of 200 ministers and 89 elders for the presbyteries, 67 elders for the royal boroughs, and 5 ministers or elders for the universities, in all 361.

Statement of the numbers of the several denominations.

Education. There are 4 universities, Edinburgh, Glasgow, St. Andrews, and Aberdeen. The literature of Scotland, as distinguished from that of England, is less learned, but more metaphysical. Parish schools are established throughout the country, and in general diffusion of knowledge, Scotland excels all other countries in Europe. The Scots are a well educated, moral, hardy, industrious, and enterprising people. The language of the Lowlands is English with a mixture of Scotch; that of the Highlanders is that species of Celtic called Gaelic or Earse.

This city, according to Mr. Park, consists, properly speaking, of four distinct towns ; two on the northern bank of the Niger, called Sego Korro, & Sego Boo ; & two on the southern bank, called Sego Soo Korro, & Sego See Korro. They are all surrounded with high mud walls ; the houses are built of clay, of a square form, with flat roofs ; some of them have two stories, and many of them are white washed. Besides these buildings, Moorish mosques are seen in every quarter ; and the streets, though narrow, are broad enough for every useful purpose in a country where wheel carriages are entirely unknown—The king of Bambarra constantly resides at Sego See Korro ; he employs a great many slaves in conveying people over the river. The view of this extensive city, the numerous canoes upon the river, the crowded population, and the cultivated state of the country, formed altogether a splendid prospect of civilization & magnificence.—It was at a village near this city, where Mr. Park was hospitably relieved by a negro woman, and gave occasion to a beautiful sonnet, written by the duchess of Devonshire.

Segorbe, t. Spain, Valencia, on the river Morviedro ; 35 N. Valencia, 150 E. Madrid. Lon. 0. 39. W. Lat. 39. 58. N. Pop. 6,000. Bp. see. It is supposed by some to have formerly been the cap. of Celtiberia, called Segobriga. It is surrounded by well cultivated gardens. The greatest curiosity is the fountain, which, even at its source, furnishes water sufficient to turn 2 mill wheels, and water all the neighbouring country. The water has the remarkable property of petrifying the roots and branches of the trees, which grow by its side.

Segostaero, t. Rus., in Kolivan ; 44 W. Krasnoiarsk.

Segovia, (an. Segobia, Segubia, and Segovia,) city, Spain, in Old Castile, capital of a province of the same name ; 40 NNW. Madrid, 73 E. Salamanca. Lon. 4. 1. W. Lat. 41. 3. N. Pop. 9,500 or 10,000. Bp. see. It is surrounded with a wall, flanked with towers and a rampart, and contains a cathedral, 23 churches, 24 convents, and 3 hospitals. The streets are narrow and crooked. The principal edifices are the cathedral, and the castle of Alcazar. The cathedral is a mixture of the Gothic and Moorish architecture. The inside is very spacious, and of majestic simplicity. The windows are well disposed, and the great altar is decorated with the finest Grenadian marble. The Alcazar of Segovia, formerly the residence of the Gothic kings, is a well preserved edifice. It was for a long time made use of as a prison, for the crews of the Barbary corsairs, who fell into the hands of the Spaniards. But the most remarkable monument here is the aqueduct, a work of great boldness and grandeur, built of freestone without cement.—This town is situated amidst the finest sheep pastures, and has long been noted for its woollen manufactures ; about 4,000 pieces of cloth being now made annually.

The province of Segovia lies between the provinces of Madrid and Valladolid ; intersected by mountains, and watered by the Ebro, Evesma, Xarama, and Duraton. Products, wool, corn, wine, hemp, & flax. Pop. 170,292. Sq. m. 3,647.

Senegal, (an. Daradus), r. Africa, the largest that flows into the sea on the western coast. It rises in a mountainous country, about Lon. 7. W. Lat. 11. 50. N., about 80 W. of the source of the Niger, and not much farther distant from the sources of the Gambia. It flows into the Atlantic in Lat. 16. 5. N., having a bar at its mouth, which prevents ships of 500 tons from entering the river. The country through which the river flows, from the coast to about 60 miles above Gallam, is a level; above Gallam the country becomes mountainous and broken, intersected with numerous streams, the sands of which are copiously impregnated with gold dust; 60 miles above Gallam is the cataract of Flau, which forms the limit of European navigation; and about 40 higher is that of Govinea.

Senegal, (Government of), name given by the French to their great African settlement, at the mouth of the Senegal, formed in the reign of Louis XIV. The principal article of commerce is gum, called gum Senegal, superior to the gum of Arabia. The quantity purchased by the French from 1785 to 1787, amounted to 800,000 lbs; bought for a little less than 2d., and sold in Europe at from 15d. to 20d. per lb. Besides gum, there were exported from the Senegal, in 1786, 2,200 slaves, valued at 2,440,000 livres; gold valued at 90,000 livres; ivory &c. 130,000 livres. St. Louis is the capital of the settlement. The great gum fair is on a barren desolate spot on the river, about 30 leagues above St. Louis.

Senna, t. A. Turkey, in Diarbekir; 80 SSE. Mosul. Pop. 8,000. It has a romantic situation in the bosom of a deep valley, well cultivated, surrounded by a mountainous country, inhabited by Curds and Iliats. About 2,000 of its inhabitants are Jews, Armenians, and Nestorians, who trade to Mosul, Bagdad, and Ispahan.

Sennaar, country, Africa, bounded N. by Dongola and the independent districts of Nubia, E. and S. by Abyssinia. and W. by Darfur. A great part of it is nearly enclosed by the Nile and Tacazze, and forms what the ancients called the island of Meroe, the central seat of the empire of ancient Ethiopia. The soil for several miles distant from the river is extremely fertile. The government is despotic; the religion Mahometan, but with it the inhabitants combine some of the rites of paganism and some remains of christianity. Christianity was introduced here at an early period, but is now almost extinct. Three governments or districts are tributary to Sennaar, Kordofan, Fazuelo, and El Acie, or Aleis. The articles of commerce are gold dust, ivory, civet, rhinoceros's horns, and above all, slaves. The commerce is carried on through Egypt, and through Suakem, and Jidda, by Shendi.

Sennaar, city, Africa, capital of the kingdom of Sennaar, on the Bahr el Azrek, or Abyssinian Nile, about 200 miles above its junction with the Bahr el Abiad, the main branch of the Nile. Lon. 33. 30. E. Lat. 13. 35. N. Pop. estimated by Poncet in 1699, at 100,000. It is situated upon ground merely high enough to secure it against the rise of the river during the rainy season. It is large, but the houses are poorly built of clay with a sparing mixture of straw, usually of only one story. The king's palace is surrounded by a lofty brick wall, the edifices are without order, but have apartments richly adorned with carpets.

The soil around Sennaar is of the most extraordinary fertility, and produces immense crops of dhourra and millet; also wheat and rice. The air is unwholesome both to man and beast; and no animals, according to Bruce, can live here during the whole year. The men are strong, but short lived, and the mortality among the children is uncommonly great.

It is pleasantly situated, the territory extending 1 mile along the river, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile in breadth. The houses are built of brick, and plastered, but few of them of more than two stories, with flat roofs, balconies, and Venetian windows. It is not fortified, but has a battery with 12 pieces of cannon, & carries on a trifling trade with Europe, China, &c.

This town is the head quarters of the Baptist missionaries in India. These worthy men, (the principal of whom are the Rev. Messrs. Carey, Marshman, and Ward,) commenced their establishment here in 1799, and have ever since been engaged in propagating Christianity, and translating and printing the scriptures; and their proficiency in the eastern languages is truly wonderful. In 1818, the New Testament had been translated in 13 of the languages of India, the whole bible into 5, viz. Bengalee, Sanscrit, Hindoo, Orissa, and Mahratta; and at the same time 12 additional versions of the New Testament were in the press. The New Testament had been printed in Chinese, and the whole bible translated. The printing establishment is extensive, consisting of 10 presses constantly employed, a type foundry, and a paper mill.

A college for the education of native preachers was established here, a few years since, & contained, in 1819, 37 students. Mr. Ward, one of the missionaries, collected in Great Britain and the United States $25,000 towards the funds of the institution. The missionaries have established in India for the gratuitous instruction of children, schools, which contained, in 1819, nearly 10,000 scholars.

Seringapatam, city, Hind., in Mysore, and for a considerable time the capital of the province ; 215 WSW. Madras. Lon. 76. 51. E. Lat. 12. 26. N. Houses, in 1800, of the fort and city 4,163 ; families 5,499 ; of the suburbs 2,216 houses, and 3,335 families. Pop. of the city, at 5 persons to a house, 20,815 ; of the suburbs 11,080 ; total 31,895. It is situated at the upper end of an island, 4 miles long and $1\frac{1}{2}$ broad, in the Cauvery, and has existed as a fortress from a remote period. During the reigns of Hyder Aly and his son Tippoo Sultan, it rose to a degree of wealth and splendour before unknown, and was supposed to contain 150,000 inhabitants.

In 1792 Seringapatam was invested by the British and allied armies, under Lord Cornwallis, amounting to 400,000 men. Tippoo Sultan, terrified, relinquished half his dominions and paid to the conquerors £3,500,000 sterling. In 1799 it was again invested by the forces of the British and Nizam, and taken by storm, May 4th, Tippoo Sultan and nearly 8,000 of his men having fallen. Seringapatam afterwards became the property of the British, and is the residence of a judge, collector, &c., but has greatly declined from its former importance.

It is an inland province, mountainous, containing extensive forests, and large uncultivated heaths. The rivers Danube and Save are on its northern, the Morava on its eastern, and the Drin on its western boundary. The climate is healthy and temperate, but rather cold for the latitude. The soil is generally fertile, but badly cultivated. The productions are wheat, barley, oats, rice, hemp, flax, vines, and various fruits; also cattle, sheep, and hogs. Timber is abundant. The inhabitants are Servians, Turks, and Jews; the last two found only in the towns. The Servians are a tribe of Slavonians, supposed to be of the same race as the Russians, and their language has a great resemblance to the Russian. The chief towns are Belgrade, Semendria, and Nissa.

Se-tchuen, pr. China, bounded N. by Chensi, E. by Hou-quang, S. by Koei-tcheou, and W. by the kingdom of Thibet, and some other neighbouring countries. Besides a great number of forts and places of strength, there are reckoned in this province 10 cities of the first class, and 88 of the second and third. The river Yang-tse-kiang traverses Se-tchuen, which is opulent, not only on account of the abundance of silk it produces, but also by its mines of iron tin, and lead, by its amber, sugar-canes, load-stone, lapis-lazuli, musk, and horses which are in great request. The capital of Se-tchuen, called Tchin-tou, was formerly the residence of the emperors.

Seleef, (an. Sitipha), t. Africa, capital of a part of Mauritania; 50 SW. Constantina. Lon. 5. 36. E. Lat. 35. 58. N. There is scarcely one fragment left, either of the ancient walls, pillars, or cisterns, of the Romans; the few remaining structures being obviously the work of the later inhabitants. The fountains, which continue to flow very plentifully near the centre of the city, are equally delightful and convenient; and without doubt gave occasion formerly for many ingenious and useful contrivances in the distribution of the water.

Seville, pr. Spain, forming the western half of Andalusia, and retaining the title of kingdom; bounded N. by Estremadura and Cordova, south by Grenada, south by the straits of Gibraltar and the Atlantic, and west by the Atlantic and Portugal. Pop. in 1797, 746,221, of whom 16,349 were ecclesiastics. Sq. m. 9,460. The chief towns are Seville, Cadiz, Ecija, Xeres, Assuna, and St. Mary's. The principal rivers are the Guadalquivir, Guadiana, Xenil, Tinto, and Adiel.

The surface is diversified with plains, hills, and mountains of moderate height. The climate is hot; the soil in some parts hard and stony, in others a fine black mould; but agriculture is very backward. The products are vines, oranges, lemons, citrons, limes, &c. There are good pasturages. The greatest article of export is bay salt.

Seville, city, Spain, in Andalusia, capital of the province of Seville, on the Guadalquivir; 45 N. Cadiz, 250 S. by W. Madrid. Lon. 5. 39. W. Lat. 37. 24. N. Pop. in 1787, 80,268; now stated at 100,000. H. 13,500. Abp. see.

It stands in a fine plain, surrounded by an old wall built of cement, of considerable height, entered by 12 gates, and furnished with 166 turrets. The interior of the city is built in the Moorish style, the streets being often so narrow that a person by extending his hands can touch the houses on either side. The streets are badly paved; the squares are neither numerous nor spacious. There are several beautiful public walks, one in particular, on the banks of the Guadalquivir.

The city contains a cathedral, 29 churches, 84 convents, and 24 hospitals. The cathedral is the largest Gothic edifice in Spain, and one of the largest churches in Europe. It was built in the 15th century, contains 82 altars, and has a tower 250 feet high, reckoned the finest in Spain. Other conspicuous edifices are the Alcazar, or palace, a Moorish building, containing galleries, baths, a library of 20,000 vols., with a garden, &c., the Longa, or exchange, the artillery school, and the mint. The houses generally cover a large space, but towards the street, they have often a mean appearance, the Moors being accustomed to confine their embellishments to the interior. Seville contains an academy for the physical sciences, one for the fine arts, a medical society, and a university founded in 1502. It has about 200 undergraduates, but it has adopted few of the modern improvements in science, and is almost as backward as at the time of its foundation.

The silk manufactures of Seville were formerly extensive. In the time of Ferdinand and Isabella it is said there were 6,000 looms. These manufactures declined in the middle and end of the 17th century, but revived again in the 18th, and between 2,000 and 3,000 looms are now employed. Other manufactures are coarse woollens, leather, tobacco, and snuff. The last is carried on in one of the largest buildings in the city, employing 100 mills. Vessels drawing more than 10 feet of water must unload 8 miles below the city, and the largest vessels stop at St. Lucar at the mouth of the river.

Seville is one of the most ancient cities of Spain, by the Romans called Hispalis; by the Goths Hispalia; by the Arabians Ixbilla, hence, by the Castilians, Sevilla. It was the residence of the Gothic kings before they moved their court to Toledo. Ferdinand the 3d, king of Castile, after a year's siege, forced Seville to open its gates to him; at this time it is said to have contained 600,000 inhabitants; and upon the capitulation 300,000 Moors abandoned the city. After the discovery of America it became the centre of the commerce of the new world, and was very flourishing; but the difficulty in navigating the river and the superior advantages of the port of Cadiz, induced the government to order the galleons to be stationed at the latter place.—Natives, the emperors Trajan, Adrian, and Theodosius; Las Casas, Cueva, Velasquez de Silva, and Herrera.

Sheffield, t. Eng., West Riding of Yorkshire, on an eminence at the confluence of the rivers Sheaf and Don; 36 S. Leeds, 162 NNW. London. Lon. 1. 29. W. Lat. 53. 22. N. Pop. in 1801, 31,314; in 1811, 35,840. H. 7,927. It has a beautiful situation, and is surrounded by hills of considerable height, which command fine prospects of the town and vicinity. It extends about a mile in length from north to south, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile in breadth. The streets are regular and handsome, the houses mostly of brick, well built, and many of them elegant; though the numerous manufacturing establishments give the town rather a smoky appearance. The public buildings are not very remarkable. The principal of these are the four churches belonging to the establishment, the town hall, infirmary, assembly room, & theatre. There are 7 dissenting meeting houses.

Sheffield has long been noted for its 2 branches of hardware manufacture, viz. cutlery and plated goods, for which it is well adapted by its situation, the neighbourhood abounding in coals and iron, and the river Don affording extensive navigation through various parts of the kingdom. These two branches of manufactures comprise a great variety of articles, and constitute the great source of the prosperity and opulence of the town. There are in the vicinity also several extensive founderies for iron, brass, and white metal. Market on Tuesday & Saturday.

Shetland, or Zetland Islands, (an. Thule,) collection of islands in the N. Atlantic ocean, situated N. of Scotland, about 15 leagues NE. of the Orkneys, 44 W. Bergen, in Norway. Lon. 1. 43. to 2. 13. W. Lat. 59. 45. to 61. 10. N. They are about 86 in number; 40 inhabited; the others small holms or rocky islets, used only for pasturage. Only one called Shetland, or Mainland, is of any considerable size. They are included in the county of Orkney; are in general rocky and barren. Shetland, the principal island, otherwise called Mainland, is about 70 miles in length, but so intersected with bays, here called Voes, on its coast every way, that no part of it is above 5 miles from the sea; some of these form safe and commodious harbours, capable of receiving vessels of the largest size. The face of the country is covered with craggy mountains, interspersed with fertile spots and morasses; no trees are found, or shrubs, except heath and juniper; the sea and voes abound in fish. Lerwick is the capital. The other chief islands are Bressay, Wallsey, Yell, Fitlar, and Unst. In 1811, the population of the Shetland islands was 22,915, chiefly employed in agriculture and fishing.

Shrewsbury, t. Eng., capital of the county of Salop or Shropshire, on the Severn; 40 W. Lichfield, 41 S. Chester, 154 NW. London. Lon. 2. 45. W. Lat. 52. 42. N. Pop. 16,606. H. 3,229. It is beautifully situated on a kind of peninsula, formed by a bend in the river; built on several eminences, presenting from every approach a pleasing variety of view. The exterior circle of the town is lined by a continued range of well built houses, but in the interior the streets are ill arranged, badly paved, and generally narrow; and on entering the town is far from corresponding with its external appearance. It has a decayed castle, anciently of great extent and grandeur, 6 churches, various dissenting meeting houses, a celebrated grammar school, an infirmary, and other institutions.

Shrewsbury is an ancient town, and has considerable trade, particularly in flannels, and some manufactures of linen yarn and porter; an extensive iron foundery; and is famous for its bran. About 20 vessels are employed on the Severn between Shrewsbury, Gloucester and Bristol. It sends 2 members to parliament. Markets on Wednesday and Saturday.—Natives, Benbow, H. Farmer, and Dr. C. Burney.

Shrilla, t. Ludamar; 38 ESE. Benown.

Shropshire, or Salop, co. Eng., bounded N. by Flintshire and Cheshire, E. by Staffordshire, S. by Herefordshire, Worcestershire, and Radnorshire, and W. by Montgomeryshire and Denbighshire; about 40 miles in length, and 36 in its greatest breadth. It is divided into 15 hundreds, which contain 15 towns and 170 parishes. It is an interesting county from its note in history, its remains of antiquity, the variety and beauty of its scenery, its richness in mineral productions, as coal, iron, and lead; and its extensive system of inland navigation. The towns are Shrewsbury, Ludlow, Bridgnorth, Wenloch, Bishop's Castle, Church Stretton, Cleobury, Drayton, Ellesmere, Newport, Oswestry, Shifnal, Wellington, Wem, and Whitchurch. The 4 first, and the county, send 2 members each to parliament. Pop. 194,298. Families employed in agriculture 16,693; in trade and manufactures 16,744; others 6,022. H. 39,495. Sq. m. 1,403.

Shus, ruins of a town, Persia, in Chusistan, on the Karasu ; 25 W. Shuster. This is supposed to be the site of the ancient city of Susa. The ruins, like those of Ctesiphon, Babylon, and Cufa, consist of hillocks of earth and rubbish, covered with broken pieces of brick & coloured tile. They occupy a great extent of ground, extending about 12 miles from the Karasu to the Abzal. The two largest and most remarkable of the mounds stand about 2 miles from the Karasu. One of them is a mile in circuit, and nearly 100 feet high ; the other, though not quite so high, has nearly double the circumference. They consist of clay and pieces of tile, with irregular layers of brick and mortar, 5 or 6 feet thick. Large blocks of marble, covered with hieroglyphics, are often dug out.

Shuster, Suster, or Tostar, city, Persia, cap. of Chusistan, & of a district of the same name, at the foot of a range of mountains, on the Abzal, a branch of the Karasu ; 150 SW. Ispahan. Lon. 48. 59. E. Lat. 32. N. Pop. upwards of 15,000. It has an old stone wall now fallen to decay. The houses are good, chiefly of stone, but the streets are narrow and dirty. Here is a considerable manufacture of woollen stuffs, which are exported to Bassora. It is an ancient city, and contains ruins, which prove it to have been a place of vast extent and considerable magnificence. The most remarkable are the castle, the dike, and the bridge. The bridge is built of hewn stone, consisting of 32 arches, 28 of which are still entire. This city has been generally believed to be the ancient Susa, called in scripture Shushan ; but Rennel and Kinnier fix the site of Susa at Shus.

Shusjimian, t. Persia, Chorasani ; 6 N. Maru.

Shutesbury, p-t. Franklin co. Mass. ; 16 SE. Greenfield, 80 W. Boston, W. 405. Pop. 1,029. Near the centre of the town there is a well, in which a fountain of medicinal water was opened by an earthquake in July 1815. Accommodations for visitors have been prepared, & the fountain is considerably resorted to. The water is found very efficacious in all cutaneous complaints. In 1819, 3 other mineral springs were discovered in the northern part of Shutesbury. The waters of one of them resemble glauber salts in its taste and effects ; those of another are tonic ; and those of the third are found useful in scrofulous complaints.

Siam, country, Asia, bounded N. by Thibet and China, E. by a range of mountains, which separate it from Cochin-china and Cambodia, S. by the gulf of Siam and the peninsula of Malacca, and W. by the Birman empire. It extends 700 or 800 miles in length from N. to S., and, like Egypt, is a wide vale, lying on both sides of the river Menam, enclosed by ridges of mountains. The Menam, like the Nile, overflows its banks, and renders the land in its vicinity very fertile. A large part of the country is mountainous, abounding in wild animals, and unproductive. The grounds on the Menam yield great crops of rice. Fruits are abundant, and of excellent quality; the durio, mangosteen, pine apple, tamarind, banana, areka, betel, sugar cane, cocoa nut, &c. The winters are dry and mild; the summers hot, moist, and unhealthy.

The European trade with Siam is not great. The articles of export are tin, tutenague, elephants' teeth, lead, saffron wood, betel, birds' nests, diamonds, pepper, salt, rattans, wax, &c. Siam is not populous. It has been estimated to contain from 2, to 4,000,000 inhabitants, and about 130,000 sq. m. The inhabitants are of dark complexion, and resemble the Birmans in their manners and customs. They have made more progress in the arts and sciences, than the inhabitants of most of the neighbouring countries. Their religion is that of Buddha, or Godama; their government despotic.

Siam, or Juthia, or Odia, capital of Siam, on the river Menam, about 60 miles above its mouth. Lon. 100. 52. E. Lat. 14. 18. N. Pop. stated by Hassel at 119,000. It is surrounded by a brick wall, which is partially decayed. It is intersected by several large canals; along these the streets run, so that ships from the river may enter the town, and land their cargoes near the principal houses. Some of the streets are tolerably large, but most of them are narrow and very dirty. The houses on firm ground are generally built of bamboos, planks, and mats; those on the banks of the rivers stand on posts about six feet high, that the water may pass freely under them. The city contains 3 royal palaces, and some magnificent pagodas, in the principal of which is an idol, 45 feet high, composed wholly of gold.

Siberia, country, Asia, including all the northern part of that continent, and comprising the greater part of Asiatic Russia, bounded N. by the Frozen ocean, E. by the Pacific ocean, S. by the Altai mountains, which separate it from Chinese & Independent Tartary, and W. by the Ural mountains. Lon. 60. to 190. E. Lat. 50. to 75. N.; about 4,500 miles long, and from 1,200 to 2,000 broad. Pop. about 1,240,000; according to Hassel 1,650,000. It is divided into 3 governments, Tobolsk, Tomsk, and Irkutsk. The principal towns are Tobolsk, Tomsk, Irkutsk, Omsk, Tiumen, Eniseisk, Nertschinsk, Yakutsk, and Kiachta.

Siberia is one of the most forlorn & desolate regions on the globe. A great portion of it is included within the limits of the Frozen zone, and even the southern parts, from their physical structure, are exposed to a high degree of cold. Its situation also nearly excludes it from communication with the civilized and improved parts of the world. The rivers generally have a northern direction, flowing into the Frozen ocean, the shores of which are barred by almost perpetual ice. Of the rivers, the Oby, Enisei, and Lena are among the largest on the globe; others are the Irtisch, Angara, Selenga, &c. The Ural mountains on the west, and the Altaian range in the south, form striking features of Siberia. Another characteristic feature consists in the immense steppes, or vast elevated plains, which cover a great portion of its surface. They are of a dull uniformity of aspect, marshy, covered with long, rank grass and aquatic shrubs, and filled with almost numberless saline lakes.

The most important natural production of Siberia consists in its mines of gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, zinc, arsenic, sulphur, plumbago, &c., found in its mountains. Next in importance to the mineral, are the animal productions. In the northern districts the prevailing animal is the rein-deer. Of the animals yielding fur, the most important are the sable, black fox, ermine, martin, and several species of squirrel. The ferocious animals are the bear, wolf, lynx, and wild hog. The elk is common as far as the 65th degree.—It is a remarkable phenomenon, that about the Frozen ocean & in various parts of Siberia, there are found prodigious remains of animals, which do not now exist in any part of that region, and many of them not in any part of the world.

The mass of the population of Siberia consists of the native tribes, who are in a degree subjected to the Russian empire. Some of the most numerous tribes are the Burats, Yakoutes, Tunguses, Samoeides, and Monguls. The prevailing religion is the system of Boodh or of the Lamas.

The commerce consists chiefly of 2 branches, one formed by the exportation of metals and furs, the other is a mere transit trade, consisting in an overland intercourse carried on across Siberia with the Chinese empire. The theatre of this commerce is Kiachta.

Sicily, originally called Sicania and Trinacria, afterwards Sicilia, the largest island in the Mediterranean, situated between Italy and the coast of Africa, of the form of an irregular triangle. Lon. 12. 42. to 16. 10. E. Lat. 36. 30. to 38. 12. N.; 180 miles long from east to west, and 130, where widest, broad. Sq. m. 12,455. Pop. in 1714, 1,133,163; in 1797, 1,655,536; in 1820, 1,713,945.

Sicily was formerly divided into 3 parts, the Val di, or Valley of Mazzara, the western part; the Val di Demona, the north-eastern, and the Val di Noto, the southern. But since 1815, it has been divided into the 7 following intendancies, which are named from their chief towns:

Intendancies.	Pop
Palermo	405,231
Messina	236,784
Catanea	289,406
Girgenti	288,877
Syracuse	192,710
Trapani	145,712
Calata Nissetta	155,225

1,713,945

Sicily is separated from Italy by the strait of Messina, which in the narrowest part is only 2 miles wide. The surface is greatly diversified by mountains and valleys. A chain of mountains extends through the island from east to west, but the most elevated summit is the famous volcano Mount Etna. The climate is warm but pleasant; the winters very mild, and the heat of summer tempered by sea breezes. Sicily has always been celebrated for its fertility, and is well watered by a great number of streams and rivulets; but the state of cultivation is very backward. The principal products are maize, wheat, other kinds of grain, flax, hemp, vines, saffron, cotton, silk, olives and various fruits. The exports consist chiefly of silk, corn, salt, olive oil, sumac, wine, and fruits; in amount not exceeding £1,500,000. The manufactures, consisting of silk, cotton, linen, and some woollens, are confined to the 3 large towns of Palermo, Messina, and Catania.

The Sicilians resemble the Italians and Spaniards in complexion and character. Their language approaches very much to the Italian. The religion is Catholic; the number of ecclesiastics is said to amount to 70,000, exclusive of a still greater number of monks and nuns. There are universities at Palermo and Catania, but education is in a backward state. The Sicilian army in time of peace consists of only 10,000 men. The revenue is computed at £1,000,000.

Sierra Leone, or Mitomba, r. Western Africa, which is derived from an unknown source in the interior, and flows into the Atlantic, Lon. 12. 30. W. Lat. 8. 20. N. It is a considerable river, and is 8 miles wide at its mouth.

Sierra Leone, country, Western Africa, situated on the Atlantic, and traversed by the river of the same name. The name is derived from a long ridge of mountains infested with lions, and rising at no great distance from the southern banks of the river. The country lies between Lat. 7. & 10. N., though its limits to the north or south of the river, as well as in the interior, are very indefinite. It is said to equal in fertility and populousness any other in this part of Africa. Cultivation, however, has made but little progress, except so far as it has been introduced by Europeans. It is covered generally with an almost impenetrable forest, only particular spots of which have been cleared and cultivated. The villages of the natives consist of 30 or 40 little, low huts, built of wood, and thatched with straw. Rice forms the constant food of those in the best circumstances; the poor subsist chiefly on millet, yams, and plantains. Cotton is cultivated, and the palm tree is common. There is abundance of the most delicate fruits, as pine apples, oranges, lemons, limes, &c. Among the articles of commerce are elephants' teeth of excellent quality, and civet. The climate is said to be more favourable to European constitutions than in most other parts of the coast.

This country is chiefly distinguished for a settlement formed here, by the British nation, for objects of philanthropy, rather than commercial advantage; the design being to colonize free negroes, and to promote the civilization of Africa. An attempt was made to form a settlement here, with upwards of 400 negroes, in 1787, but with little success. In 1791, the Sierra Leone company was incorporated by act of parliament, and 1,200 free negroes from Nova-Scotia were embarked, and arrived in March 1792, and Freetown, the original position, was again made the capital of the colony. In 1794, the town was plundered and entirely destroyed by the French, and the colonists reduced to the most destitute condition. The settlement, by the active exertions of the company, again resumed its prosperity, but not long afterwards was placed under the immediate jurisdiction of the government, like other colonies. About the same time, the African Institution was set on foot by a number of excellent and distinguished individuals, and Sierra Leone was soon placed under their entire management. Since that period, though the managers have met with various obstacles to overcome, yet there has been a gradual and decided improvement; particularly within the four or five last years the improvement and extension have been remarkable. With the efforts of the Institution, have been combined those of the Church Missionary society, who have introduced, with great advantage, the British system of education. The number of missionaries in the colony, in 1819, was 19. Their efforts to instruct the colonists in the elements of learning and religion, as well as to make them acquainted with the arts of civilized life, and to recover them from habits of idleness, immorality, and barbarism, have been attended with encouraging success. Several towns have been regularly built, and many of the negroes have become industrious farmers, skilful mechanics, and enterprising traders, and perform, with propriety, the various duties of social life.

The population of the colony in 1818, was 10,014; and in 1820, 12,509, of whom 2,097 were members of the schools. Liberated negroes 8,076; natives 2,989; Maroons 594; Nova Scotians 730; Europeans 120. Males 7,811; Females 4,698; total 12,509. The chief towns and settlements in the colony are, Freetown, the capital, Regent's Town, Leopold, Charlotte, Bathurst, Gloucester, Kiskey, & Wilberforce.

Sierra Morena, (an. Marianus, or Montes Mariana,) mt. or rather a chain of mountains of Spain, between the provinces of Cordova and Jaen to the S., and Estramadura and La Mancha to the N. The height never exceeds 3,000 feet. A few years ago, this district was the dread of travellers. Several new settlements have been formed, and new towns founded in this barbarous district. In 1791, the inhabitants of the district of 1,350 sq. m. amounted to 6,200.

Silesia, pr. Prussian states, bounded NW. by the government of Frankfort, NE. by that of Posen, E. by Poland, S. by Austrian Silesia and Moravia, and W. by Bohemia and the Saxon province of Lusatia. Lon. 14. 25. to 18. 12. E. Lat. 49. 40. to 51. 59. N.; 210 miles long from SE. to NW., and about 100 in breadth. Sq. m. 14,840. Pop. stated in 1817, at 2,017,057. It now includes the Prussian part of Lusatia. It was formerly divided into Upper and Lower, and subdivided into 19 principalities; but the Prussian province is now divided into the 4 governments of Breslau, Reichenbach, Liegnitz, and Oppeln, which are subdivided into circles. The chief towns are Breslau, the capital, Liegnitz, Oppeln, Reichenbach, Glogau, Neisse, Schweidnitz, Langen-Bielau, Glatz, Hirschberg, Jauer, Frankenstein, Schmiedberg, and Oels.

The surface is various. A long range of mountains called the Riesengebirge, the Glatz mountains, and the Moravian mountains, all included under the Sudetic chain, separate Silesia from Bohemia and Moravia. From Hungary it is separated by the Carpathians. The Oder flows from south to north through nearly the middle of the province, and receives the smaller rivers, as the Bober, Queiss, and Bartsch. The country on the eastern side, called the Polish side, is perfectly level, often sandy or marshy, and unproductive; on the western or German side, though hilly and even mountainous, it is superior in both vegetable and mineral productions; it is under better cultivation, and is indeed the best part of the Prussian territory. It contains mines of coal and iron; also some of copper, vitriol, and cobalt. It is also a great manufacturing country, and great attention is paid to the culture of flax; the linen manufactures being as common here as in Normandy or the north of Ireland. The annual amount of the linen manufacture is estimated at one million five hundred thousand pounds, of which more than one half is exported; of the woollen manufactures, next in importance, upwards of five hundred thousand pounds. Other manufactures are cotton goods, hardware, &c.

The Silesians are generally of good morals, but credulous and possessed of little information. The noblesse are numerous and poor. In religion they are divided as follows: Lutherans 1,050,000; Catholics 950,000; Reformed 6,800; Moravians 5,400; Pietists 8,000; Jews 11,500. There is a university at Breslau; and in the province are 6 gymnasias, and 7 Protestant colleges. Increasing attention has lately been paid to the establishing of parish schools, but on the Polish side there is still much ignorance. The common language is German.

Silesia, (Austrian), part of Silesia retained by Austria, in 1742, when the rest was ceded to Prussia. It is hilly and does not produce sufficient grain for its population, but has good pasturage, abundance of flax and hemp, and flourishing manufactures of linen and woollen. It is divided into 2 circles, Troppau and Teschen, and is now incorporated with Moravia. P. 346,599. H. 51,832. Sq. m. 1,842.

Sinai, mt. Arabia, near the head of the Red sea, celebrated in Scripture history as the spot where the law was given to Moses; 150 SE. Suez. The range to which it belongs is called by the Arabs Jibbel Musa, and consists of several lofty summits, the valleys of which are composed of frightful gullies between frightful and precipitous rocks. It is situated in the heart of a vast and gloomy desert, the few inhabited spots of which are occupied by hordes of Arabs, who subsist by plunder, and render the road impassable, except for a large & well defended caravan. The summit of Sinai commands a most extensive view over the Red sea, and the opposite coast of the Thebais. Immediately to the west of Sinai is Mount Horeb, & directly beneath it is the port of Tor, once the main channel, by which the commodities of India were conveyed to Egypt.

On the slope of the mountain, towards the foot, is the Greek convent of St. Catherine, which was founded there in 1331 by William Bouldesell. The edifice is 120 feet in length, nearly as many in breadth, built entirely of hewn stone. This monastery, when lately visited by Burekhardt, contained 23 monks, who were extremely ignorant, but accustomed to a severe discipline, as to food and prayer. They have a library containing about 1,500 Greek, and 700 Arabic manuscripts, but it is always shut up. The monks are kept imprisoned, as it were, by the wild Arabs. The gate is never opened, except on occasion of the visit of the archbishop; at all other times men, as well as provisions, are introduced by a basket drawn up by a cord and pulley to the height of 30 feet. Near the convent is an excellent garden, which is reached by a subterraneous passage, secured by iron gates. The interior of the convent presents little remarkable. The church of the Transfiguration, 80 feet by 53, paved with marble, alone possesses any claim to magnificence. It contains many lamps of gold and silver. The climate is temperate, in consequence of the elevation. From the convent the ascent of Mount Sinai is steep, and rendered practicable only by steps cut in the rock, or loose stones piled in succession. The number of these steps, according to Pococke, is 3,000. The rock is a remarkable species of red granite. After a short ascent the traveller comes to an excellent spring of cold water, near which is a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary. On the summit are a Christian church and a Turkish mosque. The descent is steeper and rougher than the ascent, and terminates at the monastery of Forty Saints, which is now said to be in the possession of the Arabs. Opposite to Mount Sinai is the still loftier mountain of St. Catherine.

Sinde, or Sindy, pr. Hind., formerly included in that part of Moulthan, situated on both sides of the Indus, lying chiefly between Lat. 24. & 27. N.; about 300 miles long, and 160 broad. Chief towns, Hyderabad, the capital, Tatta, the former capital, and Corachie, the chief port. It is governed by Mahometan chiefs, called ameers. The revenue is computed at £700,000 per annum. This country bears a striking resemblance to Egypt, consisting of a level plain, with a noble river fertilizing the banks, as far as the inundation extends, after which the face of the earth becomes a sandy desert, beyond which rises a range of mountains. The productions are indigo, sugar, rice, grain, saltpetre, assafœtida, and frankincense, and there is extensive pasture. The inhabitants are Mahometans of the Soony sect.

Sin-gan, city, China, of the first rank, Chen-si ; 510 SW. Peking. Lon. 108. 29. E. Lat. 35. 14. N. Next to Peking, this is the largest and finest city of China ; it is built in a great plain, and is the residence of the Tsong-tou of the 2 provinces of Chan-si and Se-tchuen, as also the governor of the eastern part of this province. There are in its jurisdiction 6 cities of the second order, and 31 of the third. This city, for several ages, was the seat of the Chinese emperors, and is yet very populous, and a place of great trade, especially in mules, which they breed up in great numbers, and send to Peking. The walls of this city, which are well fortified with towers, and surrounded with a deep ditch, are about 4 leagues in circuit, and are very near a square, the sides being almost equal. Some of the gates are very magnificent, & remarkable for their height. There is a strong garrison of Tartars in this city, commanded by a tsia-kun, or general of their nation, which are in a separate quarter of the city, from which it is parted by a strong wall. There are a great number of Mandarins here, who are mostly Tartars.

Siut, or Assiut, or Osiot, or Sciot, t. Egypt, about 2 miles W. from the Nile; 162 S. Cairo. Lon. 31. 14. E. Lat. 27. 13. N. Pop. about 25,000. It is the see of a bishop, who has about 500 Christians under his care. Siut is a large, populous, well-built town, where there is a lake dug, which serves to water the grounds. Its gardens abound in vegetables and fruit-trees; and its situation on an artificial mount denotes it occupies the site of an ancient city; accordingly, vestiges of Lycopolis are found, where the wolf was held to be a sacred animal. In a mountain about Siut are several remarkable & spacious caverns, adorned with hieroglyphics and emblematical figures. Some appear to have been sepulchral, as they contain fragments of the jars or urns in which were deposited animals considered as sacred, or slain to attend their master in the other world.

Siwah, or Siouah, t. Africa, in Tripoli, on the frontiers of Egypt, supposed by some to be the ancient Mareotis, by others, Siropum, and by Mr. Browne, Oasis; 240 W. Cairo. Lon. 26. 35. E. Lat. 29. 10. N. It is situated in a fertile and well watered valley, which is about 50 miles in circuit, according to Horneman, and hemmed in on every side by barren rocks. Browne states the extent much less. A large portion of this space is covered with date trees; there are also pomegranates, figs, olives, apricots, and plantains. The soil is sandy, and produces corn and oil. The inhabitants cultivate a considerable quantity of rice of a reddish colour, and wheat enough for their own consumption. Siwah is remarkable for a monument of antiquity, situated a few miles to the westward, called by the natives Ummebeda. It consists of a large mass of ruins in such a state of dilapidation, as to make it difficult to discover the original purpose for which the structure was designed. There are evident remains of an exterior wall of great strength, and about 300 yards in circumference. In the centre are found the ruins of what appears to have been the principal edifice. It is about 27 feet in height, 24 in width, and 10 or 12 paces in length. The walls are 6 feet thick, and constructed, particularly the roof, of very large blocks of stone, cemented with small stones and lime. The interior walls are decorated with hieroglyphics. There are some apartments cut in the rock, which appear to have been places of sepulture. This ruin is supposed to be the remains of the celebrated temple of Jupiter Ammon, an object of unbounded veneration in the ancient world.

Smyrna, or Ismir, s-p. A. Turkey, in Natolia, at the head of a long and winding gulf of the Grecian Archipelago; 176 SSW. Constantinople. Lon. 27. 8. E. Lat. 38. 28. N. Pop. stated by Hassel and others at from 120 to 130,000; 65,000 Turks, 30,000 Greeks, 8,000 Armenians, 2, or 3,000 Europeans; some Jews. Some state the population as high as 160,000, others reduce it to 100,000.

Smyrna is a city of great antiquity, and claims to be the birthplace of Homer. It has long been a flourishing city, distinguished especially in modern times for its commerce, which is so extensive as to make it considered the emporium of the Levant. It has a very large and commodious harbour, completely landlocked. The city is about 4 miles in circuit, and extends about a mile along the water, in approaching from which it makes a very beautiful appearance, but the interior, as is usual with Asiatic cities, does not correspond with the splendour of its approach. The streets are narrow, dirty, and ill paved, and the houses have a gloomy aspect.

It contains 13 mosques, 2 Greek chh., 1 Armenian, 2 Cath., 1 Protestant, 3 synagogues, & a Greek college. Of the sumptuous edifices which formerly rendered Smyrna one of the brightest ornaments of Asia Minor, scarce any vestiges now remain. The bazars, though well provided with goods, are by no means splendid in their structure. The exports consist of raw silk, Turkey carpets, cotton, goats' hair of Angora; also raisins, wine, rhubarb, amber, musk, lapis lazuli, gums, &c. Imports, woollen cloths, lead, tin, glass, wrought silk, &c.

The surrounding country is fertile and pleasant. Behind the city is an extensive and most luxuriant plain, highly cultivated, and covered with olive trees. The great inconvenience of its situation is its being liable to earthquakes and to the plague. In 1814 this disease carried off victims estimated at 50,000 or 60,000.

Society Islands, cluster of islands, in the South Pacific ocean, so named by captain Cook, in the year 1769. They are Ulietea, Otaha, Bola-bola, Huaheine, Tubai, and Maurai; the two last are very small; captain Cook called them thus, because they lay contiguous to each other. They are situated between Lon. 150. 57. and 152. W., and Lat. 16. 10. and 16. 55. S. Ulietea and Otaha lie within about two miles of each other, and are both inclosed within one reef of coral rocks, so that there is no passage between them. This reef forms several excellent harbours; the entrances into them, indeed, are but narrow, yet when a ship is once in, nothing can hurt her. The inhabitants, climate, and produce are similar, in many respects, to those of Otaheite, from which island they are not above 50 leagues distant to the NW. Huaheine seems to be a month forwarder in its productions than Otaheite. The inhabitants seem to be larger made, and more stout than those of Otaheite. Mr. Banks measured one of the men, & found him to be 6 feet $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches high; yet they are extremely indolent. The women were very fair, more so than those of Otaheite. Both sexes seemed less timid and less curious.—The labours of the missionaries have been attended with success in these islands; many of the chiefs and a large proportion of the people have relinquished their idolatrous worship, & professed their belief in Christianity. The missionaries are actively employed in instructing the ignorant natives, and in reclaiming them from their barbarous superstitions and customs. They reckon nearly 4,000 converts to Christianity.

a country of the same name, and empties into a bay opposite to an island called also Sofala. The river is of considerable magnitude and navigable. The bay is of dangerous navigation on account of its numerous shoals. The great bank of Sofala extends for two days' sail. The Portuguese, in order to avoid this bank, carry on their whole trade by coasting vessels.

Sofala, or Zofala, country, Africa, on the Mozambique channel, S. of Mocaranga, & N. of Sabia, extending about 150 miles along the coast. The inhabitants, in stature, colour, habits, and language, resemble the Caffres, being distinct from the Hottentot or negro race; are well armed and brave. The villages consist of huts, built regularly and interspersed with trees. The country is thinly inhabited, and traversed by vast herds of elephants, the ivory from which affords a staple article of commerce. Gold of excellent quality is also exported in considerable quantities. According to Vossius, Vincent, and other learned men, Sofala is the Ophir of the scriptures, whither the ships of Solomon made regular voyages in search of gold.

Sooloo, one of the Philippine islands, in the E. Indian sea, about 30 miles in length, and 15 in breadth, containing 60,000 inhabitants, who are Malays. The island enjoys a perpetual summer, and produces a great variety of fruit, and that valuable tree the teak is found in great abundance. Many Chinese live on this island, and carry on a great trade, sending to Canton black and white swallo, wax, pearls, teepye, or pearl oystershells, birds'-nests, tortoise shell, sago, rattans, sandal, and various dyeing woods, cinnamon, or cassia, &c. At Sooloo, and many neighbouring islands, the pearl fishery has been carried on for ages, and is the principal source of their wealth. The dominions of Sooloo extend over the principal part of the archipelago of islands between Borneo and Mindanao, called the Soloo Archipelago, and even on the north coast of the former island. Their religion is Mahometan, and in their morals they are faithless and cruel. The English East India company have an agent in this island. The principal town is Bowang, Bewen, Sooloo, or as others call it, Soong, about 3 miles in circuit, and containing about 6,000 inhabitants. The sultan's seraglio contains 200 or 300 women. The situation is between Borneo and Mindanao, 42 SW. from the latter. Lon. 121. E. Lat. 6. N.

Sound, or Oresound, the strait, or narrow sea between Denmark and Sweden, through which vessels pass out of the North sea into the Baltic, and return by the same channel. The strait is about 4 miles over, and the Danes take a toll of all ships that pass through the strait. The number of vessels which passed the Sound in 12 years, viz. from 1786, to 1797 inclusive, was 119,356. The English, French, Dutch, and Swedes, pay 1 per cent., and all other nations $1\frac{1}{4}$. Out of this toll, the king of Denmark maintains all the light houses on the coasts from Copenhagen to the extremity of North Jutland.

Sourabaya, t. Java, on NE. coast, near the mouth of a navigable river of the same name, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. from the sea. Lon. 112. 55. E. Lat. 7. 14. S. It is a large and flourishing town, well built, and some of the houses are elegant. The river divides the European part from the Chinese and native quarter. It is situated within the narrow strait, which is formed by the islands of Java and Madura, and at the mouth of the river is Fort Calimas, a circular battery, mounting 40 guns, and commanding a sweep across the strait. The roads and avenues around the town are delightful. The ground is rather low, being chiefly cultivated with rice, interspersed with cocoa nut and other fruit trees; and the district is populous and productive. In proportion as the neighbouring town of Gressie has fallen to decay, the new one of Sourabaya has risen rapidly in population and prosperity.

Sou-tcheou, city, China, of the first rank, in Kiang-nan, on a river which communicates with the lake Tai; 562 SSE. Peking. Lon. 120. E. Lat. 31. 22. N. This is one of the most beautiful and agreeable cities of the whole empire. Europeans, who have seen it, compare it to Venice, with this difference, that the latter is built in the sea, and Sou-tcheou is intersected by canals of fresh water. There is not perhaps in the world a country more delightful, either by the pleasantness of its situation, or the mildness of its climate; the air is so temperate, provisions so plentiful and cheap, the soil so fruitful, and the manners of the people so gentle, that this city is considered the paradise of China. Above (say the Chinese authors) is the celestial paradise; but the paradise of this world is Sou-tcheou. To see the continual motion of its immense number of inhabitants, and the confusion caused every where by their commercial intercourse with strangers, one would be induced to believe that the trade of all the provinces centered in it. The brocades and embroideries made here are in great request throughout the whole empire. Its jurisdiction extends over only 8 towns, one of which is of the second class, and the rest of the third.

Spa, t. Neth., in Liege; 16 SE. Liege, 21 E. Huy, 200 NE. Paris. Lon. 5. 50. E. Lat. 50. 31. N. Pop. 3,119. It is situated on a rivulet that runs into the Ourte, with meadows and cultivated fields in its immediate vicinity, but with high and steep mountains at a short distance, so that the country around forms a wild and romantic landscape, but is unproductive.

Spa has been long famous for its medicinal springs, which are mentioned by Pliny, and are 6 or 7 in number; the principal ones are Pouhon, Geroustere, Sauveniere, and Tonnelet. The waters are all chalybeate, and those of Pouhon being the most strongly impregnated, are bottled for exportation. Their effect is diuretic and exhilarating; useful in cases of relaxation, obstructions of the liver, &c. They are visited in the warm season, lasting about 4 months; the company is composed in a great measure of men of rank from Germany, France, Netherlands, and England. Spa is provided with various amusements, and has good accommodations; the new Vauxhall is one of the finest buildings of the kind on the continent. The town on account of its being resorted to from various parts of Europe has been allowed neutrality during the hottest wars.

Pop. in 1715, less than 7,000,000; in 1768, 9,000,000; in 1788, nearly 10,000,000; in 1816, 10,372,000; in 1821, 11,248,026. This statement indicates that, contrary to a common impression, there has been, within the last century, a great increase of the population of Spain.

Chief towns. The chief towns are Madrid, the capital, Barcelona, Seville, Valencia, Cadiz, Saragossa, Malaga, Grenada, Murcia, and Carthage. The principal seaports are Cadiz, Barcelona, Malaga, Carthage, Alicante, Corunna, Bilbao, and St. Sebastian.

Face of the country. Spain is a mountainous country, and a large portion of it has an elevated surface. The Pyrenees form its north-eastern barrier, and are connected with the Cantabrian chain, which extends throughout the north of Spain, parallel with the bay of Biscay. From nearly the middle of this range, a secondary chain separates from it extending to the south, and branching into 4 other chains, extending to the west and east. In the south and southeastern parts are extensive plains.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Minho, Duero, Tagus, Guadiana, Guadalquivir, Xucar, and Ebro.

Soil, productions, &c. The soil, when well watered, is for the most part fertile, but it is often left in a dry and parched state, particularly in the central parts. The productions are wheat, maize, barley, oats, hemp, flax, millet, coffee, cotton, sugar, rice, cocoa, vines, olives, oranges, lemons, almonds, &c. Iron mines are abundant; there are also mines of lead, copper, coal, &c. The basis of a great part of the mountains, is calcareous, the rocks being composed chiefly of varieties of marble & limestone. Salt obtained by evaporation, is a principal product. Sheep are very numerous, and their wool has long been celebrated. Andalusia is famous for its breed of horses. Mules are in general use for travelling; cattle are less numerous than the wants of the country require. Cultivation is in a very backward state, owing to various discouragements of agriculture, the loss of time in holydays, &c. The proportion of the inhabitants engaged in agriculture in Spain is said to be only one third; in France two thirds.

Climate. The climate is pleasant & refreshed by sea breezes; in the elevated parts in the interior, it is subject to piercing winds in winter; in the southern parts, it is hot, at some seasons unhealthy, and subject to a scorching wind from Africa called the Solano.

Trade. The exports consist of wool, wine, brandy, fruit, olive oil, silk, salt, &c. The amount in 1792, was computed at £7,000,000 sterling, and is not supposed to have ever exceeded £9,000,000. The manufactures are few; those conducted with the most spirit are silk and leather.

Finances. The finances have long been in a state of disorder. The revenue arises chiefly from taxes, and every year falls short of the expenditure. In 1817, the revenue was stated at £6,000,000; the expenditure at upwards of £7,000,000. The national debt is between £150,000,000 and £200,000,000.

Government. The government is a hereditary monarchy, heretofore nearly absolute, but since the re-proclamation or the Spanish constitution on the 4th of March, 1820, the power of the king is greatly limited. It is declared a limited hereditary monarchy, and the power of making laws is fixed in the cortes jointly with the king; and the execution of them in the king. The cortes is composed of deputies, chosen for two years, by the citizens; one deputy being elected for every 70,000 souls. The person of the king is sacred and inviolable; but he cannot prevent the assembling of the cortes, or suspend or dissolve them. There are 7 ministers of public affairs. The liberty of the press is acknowledged, and the trial by jury has been introduced.

Army and navy. The army consisted, in 1821, of about 50,000 men; and the navy in 1814, of 5 ships of the line, 10 frigates, and 65 smaller vessels. The chief naval stations are Cadiz, Ferrol, and Carthage.

Religion. The Roman Catholic is the only religion openly tolerated. There are 9 archbishops, 61 bishops, and about 40,000 clergy, distributed throughout 18,871 parishes. In addition to these, there were previously to 1820, 2,000 monasteries, containing about 50,000 monks, and 1,075 convents containing about 20,000 nuns. A part of these have been lately abolished, and a portion of other church property has been appropriated to the public use. The prelates have had in some instances enormous incomes, the archbishop of Toledo, the primate, about £100,000 annually, while the inferior clergy lived in a state of poverty. The inquisition was abolished by Bonaparte; restored by Ferdinand in 1814; and again abolished in 1820.

Education, &c. Spain had formerly 24 universities; now only 11, viz. Salamanca, Valladolid, Alcalá, Seville, Valencia, Grenada, Cervera, Saragossa, Oviedo, Huesca, and Compostella. The antiquated logic and scholastic theology and philosophy continue to be taught in a degree, though some improvements have of late been introduced into the universities, and exertions have recently been made to extend the advantages of education among the people. The Spanish is a fine and harmonious language, founded on the Latin, with a mixture of Celtic, and in the southern provinces, of Arabic. The characteristics most general among the Spaniards, are a degree of stateliness or gravity, moderation in eating and drinking, and indolence. Splendid religious processions are common. Bull fighting is a national amusement; and the national dances are the Bolero and Fandango.

Spaitla, (an. Suffetela), t. Africa, in Tunis; 110 SW. Tunis, 120 SSE. Bona. Lon. 9. 10. E. Lat. 35. 10. N. According to Dr. Shaw, it is one of the most remarkable places in Barbary, for the extent and magnificence of its ruins, among which are distinguished a triumphal arch of the Corinthian order, and three temples, the greater part of which is entire. One of these temples appeared to Bruce to present a specimen superior to what is to be found any where else. Spaitla is pleasantly situated upon a rising ground, shaded all over with juniper trees.

Spalatro, s-p. Aust. Dalmatia, capital of a circle; 25 SE. Sebenico, 100 NW. Ragusa. Lon. 16. 45. E. Lat. 43. 22. N. Pop. 7,368. It stands on a peninsula, on the gulf of Venice, and has a spacious and deep harbour, and is defended on the sea and land side; but being surrounded by several eminences, it is not capable of sustaining a regular siege, and its security depends in a great measure on the strong pass of Clissa among the mountains. The inhabitants are employed in manufactures of woollen, silk, and leather; also in the fisheries on the Adriatic and the shipping business. The Turkish caravans from Bosnia and Servia to Venice usually deposit their goods here. Abp. see. At Spalatro, are magnificent remains of a palace of the emperor Dioclesian. Without the walls is a sulphureous spring, of considerable service in chronical diseases.—Pop. of the circle 81,263. Sq. m. 1,717.

Spitzbergen, or East Greenland, group of islands, in the Frozen sea, supposed to have been first discovered by sir Hugh Willoughby, in the year 1553, and received their name from their mountainous & rocky appearance. The sun never sets for 3 months, June, July, and August; for the rest of the year it is hardly seen, light being chiefly produced by the Aurora Borealis. In the month of June it freezes; in July the heat is violent; the cold returns in August. On the coasts are found whales, sea-dogs, sea-cows, and sea-lions, with other marine & amphibious animals. These islands are uninhabited.—Eight English sailors, accidentally left here by a whale fishing ship, survived the winter here, and were brought home the next season. The Dutch attempted to settle a colony here, but the settlers perished. The Dutch ships still resort to Schmeerenburgh harbour in Lon. 9. 51. E. Lat. 74. 44. It is a pleasant and flourishing town, and contains a court house, a jail, a bank, a woollen manufactory, a rope walk, a furnace, 2 paper mills, 2 Congregational churches, 2 public libraries, which together contain about 1,000 volumes, and a printing office, from which is issued a weekly newspaper. Here is a large, pleasant, and handsome village, which has considerable trade, and contains a number of elegant houses. The Indian name of Springfield was Agawam.

There is in this town, belonging to the U. S., a very extensive establishment for the manufacture of arms. The arsenal is delightfully situated on an elevated plain about a half a mile east of the village. The buildings are finely arranged around a level square of 20 acres, and make an elegant appearance. One building is 204 feet by 32, of 2 stories, with a cupola, which affords an extensive and interesting view of Connecticut river and the surrounding country; another is 100 by 40; a third 60 by 32; all of brick, 2 stories high. The second story of the last, forming a spacious hall, is consecrated as a place of public worship. There are also other buildings for work shops, store houses, &c., and 17 dwelling houses.

The water works are situated about a mile south of the arsenal, in 3 divisions, denominated Upper, Middle, and Lower, Water Shops, on Mill river, a fine stream, which falls into the Connecticut. They form the greatest collection of mills and other water works in the state.

The whole comprises 5 work shops, 28 forges, 10 trip hammers, 18 water wheels, 9 coal houses, 3 stores, and 5 dwelling houses.

This establishment employs from 240 to 250 workmen, who complete on an average, about 45 muskets daily.

From 1795 to 1817 inclusive.

Staffa, small island of the Hebrides, celebrated for its basaltic pillars & its natural caverns, particularly the cave of Fingal; 9 N. Iona, 15 W. Mull. It is of an oval form, $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. in circ., presenting an uneven table land, terminating nearly all round by cliffs of variable height. The greatest elevation is 144 feet. The surface is covered by a rich soil and luxuriant grass, affording excellent pasture for a herd of black cattle; but there is no house on the island. A considerable portion of the precipitous face of Staffa is in a columnar form; the highest point of this face is 112 feet above high water mark. There are several remarkable caves, as Great cave, 224 feet long; Boat cave, 150 feet long; Mackinmon's, or the Scart, or Cormorant's cave; and above all Fingal's cave, which is celebrated by those who have visited it in terms of unbounded admiration. "The mind," says sir Joseph Banks, "can hardly form an idea more magnificent than such a space, supported on each side by ranges of columns, and roofed by the bottoms of those which have been broken off to form it; between the angles of which a yellow stalagmitic matter has been extended, which serves to define the angles precisely, & at the same time with a great deal of elegance; and to render it still more agreeable, the whole is lighted from without, and the air is perfectly free from the damp and noxious vapours, with which natural caverns in general abound." The outline of the aperture of this cave, when viewed in such a light as to shew it distinctly, is perpendicular at the sides, and terminates above in a species of Gothic arch. The height from the top of the cliff to the top of the arch, is 30 feet; from the top of the arch to the water at mean tide 66 feet. The length of the cave is 227 feet; the breadth of the entrance 42 feet; the height of the cave within from 44 to 50 feet. The sides, like the front, are in general perpendicular, but the columns are frequently broken and irregularly grouped. "It would be no less presumptuous than useless," says Mr. Macculloch, "to attempt a description of the picturesque effect of that, to which the pencil is inadequate. But if this cave were even destitute of that order and symmetry, that richness arising from multiplicity of parts, combined with greatness of dimension and simplicity of style, which it possesses; still the prolonged length, the twilight gloom, half concealing the playful and varying effects of reflected light, the echo of the measured surge, as it rises and falls, the transparent green of the water, and the profound and fairy solitude of the whole scene, could not fail strongly to impress a mind gifted with any sense of beauty in art or in nature."

It contains 2 Congregational parishes, a Baptist, a Methodist, and a Universalist meeting house. Here are large quantities of bog iron ore, excellent for casting, and there are 2 forges and 2 furnaces. Castings, hollow ware, cannon & cannon shot or balls are manufactured here extensively. There are 2 mineral springs in this town, one containing a large portion of hydrogen gas and a small portion of iron. The other is a chalybeate spring, and the most celebrated in New England. Good accommodations are provided for visitors. It is resorted to by persons afflicted with the dropsy, gout, rheumatism, piles, ulcers, and scorbutic, scrofulous, and cancerous complaints.

Stafford, t. Eng., in a county to which it gives name; 17 NE. Lichfield, 135 NW. London. Lon. 2. 8. W. Lat. 52. 48. N. Pop. 4,868. It is the county town, where the assizes and quarter sessions are held. It was anciently surrounded by a wall, and had 4 gates. It contains 2 chh., houses of worship for Independents, Presbyterians, Methodists, and Quakers, a county hall, a county infirmary, a county lunatic asylum, a free school, &c. The streets are well paved, and the houses are mostly built of brick in a regular and compact manner. The chief manufactures are boots and shoes, also leather. It is situated on the river Sow, and near a navigable canal, which extends through several counties. The market is on Saturday. It sends 2 members to parliament.

Staffordshire, co. Eng., bounded NE. by Derbyshire, E. by Leicestershire, SE. by Warwickshire, S. by Worcestershire, W. by Shropshire, and NW. by Cheshire; about 54 m. in length from north to south, and from 18 to 36 in breadth. Sq. m. 1,196. Pop. 295,153. H. 57,040. Families employed in trade and manufactures 34,011; in agriculture 18,361; otherwise 10,165. It is divided into 5 hundreds, 183 parishes, containing 1 city, Lichfield, 3 boroughs, Stafford, Newcastle, and Tamworth, and 17 other market towns. The surface is variegated; the county not remarkable for its agriculture, its industry and resources being more directed to mines & manufactures. The minerals are very important, consisting chiefly of coal, iron, and limestone. The potteries around Newcastle-under-Lyne are very celebrated, and have filled a district, naturally barren, with population and wealth.

Stalimene, (an. Lemnos,) isl. in the Grecian Archipelago, about 15 m. in length, and 11 in breadth. Lon. 25. 16. E. Lat. 39. 54. N. Pop. 8,000 Greeks. It abounds with mountains and valleys, which in some places are cultivated ; & produce a variety of fruit. The eastern part of the island is dry and barren ; on the contrary, the W. and S. coasts are fertile, having a great number of springs. In it are 2 high mountains, by the ancients called Meschilæ, which being volcanoes, occasioned the name of Æthalia to be given anciently to this island. It was formerly sacred to Vulcan, whom the inhabitants worshipped as their patron ; and it has always been famed for a certain kind of earth or bole, which is called, from the place, Terra Lemnia. In this island formerly was a famous labyrinth, consisting of a stately building, supported by 40 pillars, of an uncommon height & thickness. —The two principal places, and once towns here, are Cochino, formerly Hephestias, and Lemno, Stalimene, Castro, or Limije, the ancient Mirinia. The latter is the residence of a Greek bishop, and contains about 2,000 inhabitants.

Total 2,425,223

Towns. The principal towns are Rome, the capital, Bologna, Ferrara, Ancona, Perugia, Benevento, Faenza, Civita Vecchia, Ravenna, and Viterbo. The chief ports are Ancona and Civita Vecchia.

Face of the country, &c. The papal territory is traversed from the NW. to the SE. by the Apennines, which divide it into 2 unequal parts, moderate the violent heats of summer, and give rise to a number of streams, of which the only one of any interest is the Tiber. The lakes are those of Perugia, Bolsena, and Bracciano. In the south end on the west coast are the Pontine marshes, between the first chain of the Apennines and the sea, extending from Cisterna to Terracina, 25 miles. This is a marshy tract, in which the water of the streams which descend from the Apennines, stagnates from the general want of declivity. These marshes not only prevent a considerable tract from being cultivated, but corrupt the atmosphere for several miles round. Several canals for draining these noxious waters, were dug about 1790. La Maremma is the name given to a longer tract, extending from Leghorn to Terracina, throughout the papal territory and the greater part of Tuscany. Many parts of it are marshy, and the whole affected, in a greater or less degree, with the malaria. The unwholesomeness of the air here continues from about the middle of July to the rainy season, in October. The upper part of the country, or that lying towards the Adriatic, enjoys a healthy climate, and is in general tolerably well cultivated, producing all kinds of corn and pulse, with excellent wine, fruit, oil, silk, flax, and hemp. Cattle and sheep are numerous.

Manufactures, trade, &c. Manufactures are not extensive. There are considerable silk manufactures, the most important at Bologna; also coarse woollens, coarse linens, hats, &c. Commerce is not flourishing. The chief article of export is wool; another is alum. The mineral products are marble, alum, rock salt, & sulphur.

Government, &c. The government is a theocracy, the Pope being invested with absolute power, both spiritual and temporal. A candidate for the papacy must be a member of the college of cardinals (nominally consisting of 70,) and an Italian by birth. The chief ministers of state are cardinals, and the governors of provinces are cardinals or prelates. The number of bishops is about 30. According to an official statement, in 1818, there were, in all the world, 2 vicars, 12 patriarchs, 707 bishops or suffragan bishops, subject to the nomination or confirmation of the Pope. The revenue consists of 30,000,000 francs; the army of 4, or 5,000 men; the navy of a few galleys and vessels stationed at Civita Vecchia. The inhabitants are mostly Catholics; there are a few Protestants, and 18, or 20,000 Jews.

Stiria, called also Inner Austria, pr. Austrian empire, bounded N. by the archduchy of Austria, E. by Hungary, S. by Carniola and Carinthia, now Illyria, and W. by Carinthia and Salzburg. Pop. 799,056. Sq. m. 8,459. It is divided into 5 circles, Gratz, Marburg, Cilley, Judenburg, and Bruck. The last two circles comprise Upper Stiria, which lies to the north, and is mountainous, consisting, in a great measure, of a continuation of a branch of the Alps. Lower Stiria comprises the southern part, and includes the 3 other circles. A number of lateral branches of the Alps extend also into Lower Stiria, but become gradually lower as they remove from the main chain, till they present nothing but small elevations. Here are, however, but few extensive plains. The rivers are the Drave, Save, Muhr, and Ens.

The climate in the elevated parts is cold, but the air is pure and elastic; the soil, except on the high mountains, very fertile, producing wheat, oats, rye, potatoes, and in warmer situations, wheat. Great attention is paid to raising cattle, and poultry is abundant. Agriculture is in a backward state. Stiria abounds in mineral productions. The iron mines are the most important, and yield annually from 16,000 to 20,000 tons. Salt and coal are abundant. Gold, silver, and copper, hardly defray the expense of working; lead is less scarce. Cobalt, arsenic, and molybdena, are found. The manufactures are chiefly derived from the mines. The exports consist of metals, corn, flax, wine, clover seed, and cattle. The Stirians have the hospitality, frankness, and simple habits of an agricultural people, but they are imperfectly educated, though parish schools have been established in the principal villages. The majority are Catholics, though the Protestants enjoy a full, and the Jews a limited, toleration.

Stirling, t. Scot., capital of a county to which it gives name; 29 NE. Glasgow, 35 NW. Edinburgh. Lon. 3. 59. W. Lat. 56. 6. N. Pop. 5,820. It is situated on the right bank of the Forth, on an eminence which terminates in a rock. The street on the summit of the hill is spacious, but the others are narrow and irregular. It contains 2 parish chh., 3 hospitals, a town-house, a grammar school, a public library, and has considerable inland trade, and some foreign, chiefly to the Baltic. Vessels of 60 or 70 tons come up to the quay. The principal manufactures are cotton and woollen, particularly carpets. Stirling, or Striveling, i. e. the place of strife, or contention, denoting the bloody scenes of warfare which have taken place here and in the vicinity, is a place of great antiquity, and much note in Scottish history. Its castle is very ancient, finely situated at the western extremity of the rock on which the town is built.

Stockholm, city and capital of Sweden, situated at the junction of the lake Malar with an inlet of the Baltic; 300 NE. Copenhagen, 400 W. Petersburg. Lon. 18. 4. E. Lat. 59. 21. N. Pop. in 1760, 69,208; in 1780, 75,107; in 1800, 75,517; in 1810, 65,474; in 1815, 72,989. H. 6,000. Births in 1819, 2,329, nearly one half out of wedlock.

Stockholm is generally described as standing on 7 islands, but is chiefly built on 3, of which the small one in the centre constituted the original city, and is still the most busy part of the town, and the residence of the principal merchants. The form of the city is an oblong, and its situation is extremely picturesque, as well from the mixture of land and water, as from the unevenness of the ground on which it is built. The view from the higher grounds is seldom surpassed; churches, spires, public edifices, are all in prospect, and intermingled with vessels at anchor, or sailing across the channels, while the view is terminated by mountains, with a variety of romantic scenery. There are 12 bridges, great and small. The houses in the central part are of stone or brick, covered with plaster, of 4 or 5 stories, with their foundations on piles, but in the suburbs of only 1 or 2 stories, and partly of wood.

Among the public buildings are the royal palace, the palace or house for nobility of the diet, arsenal, bank, royal stables, ware house for iron, hospitals, and 24 churches, 18 of which are Lutheran. The royal palace is a large quadrangular edifice, the lower part of the walls of polished granite, the upper part of brick, covered with stucco, and is accounted second to no palace in Europe, except that at Versailles. The literary associations are numerous and respectable; the principal are the academy of sciences founded in 1739, having a museum, library, an observatory, and 160 members; the Swedish academy, founded in 1786, for improving the Swedish language, having 18 members; the academy of fine arts, history and antiquities; the military academy, academy for painting and sculpture, and for music, and the medical college. The royal library contains about 50,000 volumes, and there are several important private collections; one belonging to Gensuchtelen contains 40,000 volumes, and 20,000 medals.

Stockholm is the mercantile emporium of the eastern part of Sweden. The harbour is of great depth, and so capacious that 1,000 vessels may lie here in safety, and the largest come close up to the quays. The number of vessels that enter annually is, on an average, about 1,000. The chief exports are iron and steel, also copper, pitch, tar, and timber; imports, colonial produce, wine, fruit, salt, and British manufactures. The manufactures are various, but not on a large scale.

It is situated on a rocky bay of the German ocean, and has a flourishing commerce, and considerable manufactures of brown linen. The town has a cheerful and elegant appearance, with considerable wealth. The harbour is a natural basin, sheltered on the SE. by a high rock, and on the NE. by a quay convenient for unloading goods, but it is not safe.

Stonehenge, a remarkable ancient monument, Eng., in Wiltshire, in the middle of Salisbury Plain; 2 W. Amesbury, 81 W. London. It consists of a great collection of stones of immense size, which, from their being some erect, some reclining, but most of them lying upon the ground, seem to have formed at one time an extensive building. They form a perfect ruin, a confused heap of standing and fallen stones, many of them squared and hewn by art. By comparing their relative situations the shape and dimensions of the original structure can still be traced, which is supposed to have been a Druidical temple of enormous size. It is an object of great interest to the antiquary, and has excited more inquiry and speculation than any other ruin of the kind in Great Britain. But no important discoveries have been made within it; and its founders, the date of its erection, and the process by which such enormous masses of stone were conveyed to this desolate spot, and raised into their respective situations, are buried in profound obscurity. The total number of stones of which the structure was composed appears to have been 109.

Strasburg, (an. Argentoratum), city, France, capital of Lower Rhine, formerly capital of Alsace, at the conflux of the Brusche and Ille, half mile W. of the Rhine; 66 N. Bâle, 75 E. Nancy, 290 E. Paris. Lon. 7. 45. E. Lat. 48. 35. N. Pop. in 1806, 49,902; one third Protestants. Bp. see. It is an ancient, celebrated, large, strong, and commercial city; of semicircular form, built on a plain, and divided into several parts by canals, over which are several bridges. The houses are chiefly of a red stone, lofty, but often heavy and inelegant, built after the German manner; the language and customs of a majority of the inhabitants being still German. A few streets are wide and straight, but most of them are narrow. The fortifications are extensive, divided into old and new. The citadel is a regular pentagon, lying to the east, and with its out works, extending almost to the Rhine. It contains a cathedral, 6 Cath. chh., 7 Luth., and 1 Ref.; 2 hospitals, 2 theatres, 2 public libraries, a botanic garden, a medical school, a high school, a royal and a Lutheran academy or university. The cathedral, founded in 1015, and finished in 1275, is one of the most distinguished specimens of Gothic architecture existing. Its tower, 474 feet high, is ascended by a stair of above 700 steps, and is a masterpiece of architecture, being built of hewn stone, cut with such nicety as to give it at a distance some resemblance to lace. The clock is also a master piece of mechanism, for besides the hour of the day, it describes the motions of the planets. The Protestant church of St. Thomas contains a splendid monument erected by Louis XV., to marshal Saxe.—It is common to give to the seminaries at Strasburg the next rank after those of Paris. This city is famous in the history of the Reformation, and the two principal Protestant seminaries in France are at Strasburg and Montauban. It is favourably situated for trade, in a fertile and well cultivated country, the Rhine connecting it with Switzerland on the one side, and with Netherlands on the other. The exports are corn, flax, hemp, wine, and spirituous liquors; also linen, sail cloth, blankets, carpets, hardware, leather, cotton, lace, tobacco, and snuff.

Stuttgart, or Stuttgart, city, and capital of the kingdom of Wurtemberg, on the small river Nisselbach ; 35 ESE. Carlsruhe, 45 NW. Ulm, 116 WNW. Munich. Lon. 9. 11. E. Lat. 48. 46. N. Pop. in 1815, 23,694. H. 1,976. It is situated in a valley, 2 miles from the Neckar, and is divided into three parts, the town proper, two suburbs adjacent to each other, and a separate suburb called Esslingen. The town proper is badly built, the streets being narrow, and the houses frequently of wood ; the suburbs have a better appearance, particularly that of Esslingen, which contains the royal palace, gymnasium, barracks, and other public buildings. The palace is a noble structure, situated near an extensive park, and contains a good collection of paintings, statues, &c. The royal library is said to contain 180,000 vols., including 12,000 copies of the bible of different editions. The town has a public library, an old palace, mint, town house, great church, and royal stables. Though surrounded by a wall and ditch, Stuttgart is a place of no strength. The manufactures are on a small scale ; the expenditures of the court and nobility forming the chief support of the inhabitants. The surrounding country is fertile and delightful, consisting of eminences covered with vineyards, and valleys laid out in corn fields.—Natives, Spittler and Moser.

Suakem, or Suakin, or Suaquem, s-p. Nubia, on W. coast of the Red sea. Lon. 37. 33. E. Lat. 19. 48. N. It is situated on an island. It was taken possession of by the Turks at the same time they occupied the opposite coast of Arabia ; and they still retain it, though their power is limited to the island on which it stands. In the 15th century it was a place of great wealth and importance, the emporium of the Red sea, and one of the richest cities in the east. De Castro at that time considered it superior to every other city he had seen, except Lisbon ; it was the maritime capital of the Turks in the middle ages, in the Red sea, where they supported a powerful navy ; but since the 15th century it has suffered an extreme decline, and is now almost in ruins. The harbour is excellent, and capable of containing 200 large vessels ; and the town is now supported only by being the channel by which communication is maintained between Arabia and the interior of Africa. Two minarets give the place a handsome appearance at a distance ; and the buildings being white-washed, and on an elevated site, look much better than they really are. The country around is occupied by a hardy race of Bedouin Arabs, called Suakini. Water here is abundant and good, and fish plentiful. Suakem is supposed to be the Soter Limen of Diodorus, and the Theon Soter of Ptolemy.

Suez, city, Egypt, on the borders of Arabia ; 59 E. Cairo, 65 S. Tineh. Lon. 32. 28. E. Lat. 29. 59. N. It is remarkable for its situation at the north end of the Red sea, and on the south border of the isthmus to which it gives name. According to D'Anville it occupies the site of ancient Arsinoe ; but in the opinion of Volney, that place was further to the north, towards the bottom of the gulf. It was formerly a flourishing mart, being at once the emporium of the trade with India, and the rendezvous of the numberless pilgrims, who, from various parts of the Turkish empire, resorted to Mecca. The assemblage of these, though the stationary population was never large, produced an immense crowd. When Niebuhr was there, Suez appeared to him as populous as Cairo. Since that time it has greatly declined, in consequence both of the diminution of the general trade of the Red sea, and of the concourse to Mecca. It also sustained great injury from the French.

Suez, though a maritime place, is so situated that vessels cannot approach nearer than $2\frac{1}{2}$ m. from the town. The surrounding country is a complete desert, a mere bed of rock slightly covered with sand. Trees, meadows, and gardens are unknown, and scarcely a plant is to be seen. All provisions must be brought from Cairo. There is also an entire deficiency of water except of the most offensive and noxious description. Upon the whole, Mr. Turner conceives that Suez is indubitably the most miserable place in the Levant, the passion for money being the only inducement to reside in it. It is, however, the channel of much of the trade of Cairo to Arabia and India, and of the whole of that to Syria and Palestine. Here are 8 considerable mercantile houses, 6 Greek, and 2 French. It is without walls ; has 500 stone houses, of which more than one half were destroyed by the French, and still continue in ruins.

Sumatra, island in the Eastern seas, the largest and most westerly of the Sunda islands, separated from the continent by the straits of Malacca, & from Java by the straits of Sunda. It is divided obliquely by the equator into almost equal parts, and its general direction is from NW. to SE. Lat. of one extremity 5. 56. N. of the other 5. 56. S. It is about 1,000 m. long, and 165, on an average, broad. Sq. m. about 160,000.

A chain of high mountains runs through the whole extent of the island, and the ranges are in many parts double and treble. Mount Ophir, immediately under the equinoctial line, is supposed to be the highest visible from the sea, its summit being elevated 13,842 feet above that level. Among the ridges of mountains are extensive plains of great elevation and of temperate climate; the most valuable and best inhabited portion of the island. Here too are found many large and beautiful lakes. The ridges of mountains lie towards the western shore; in consequence, all the greatest rivers are found on the eastern side. The climate varies with the height of the ground; but on the plains the heat is not so great as might be expected from the position; the thermometer in the most sultry heat, about 2 o'clock P. M., generally fluctuates.

tuating from the 82° to 85° ; at sunrise it is usually as low as 70° .

The soil is generally fertile; the population for the most part thin; and a great portion of the island is covered with an impenetrable forest. The most important article of cultivation is rice, of which there are many different species. Of articles of commerce the most abundant is pepper, formerly obtained in greater quantities than at present. Other productions are gum benzoin, camphor, cassia, cotton, coffee, &c. It is rich in mineral and fossil productions; has long been famous for gold, which is still procured in considerable quantities; and has mines of iron, copper, and tin. It produces a great variety and abundance of fruits, and abounds in wild animals, some of the most ferocious species; also in birds of various kinds.

The inhabitants are rather below the middle size; their limbs are for the most part slight, but well shaped. The women flatten the noses and compress the skulls of children newly born; and the males destroy their beards. The inhabitants have made but little progress generally in the arts of industry, though they excel in some particular manufactures. The Malayan language is every where spoken along the coasts of Sumatra. Among the modern political divisions of the island, the principal are the empire of Menamabow and the Malays, the Achineese, the Battas, the Rejangs, & the people of Lampong. Bencoolen is the only English settlement on the island.

Sunderbunds, extensive, woody, inhospitable district, Hindoostan, intersected by the mouths of the Ganges, in the S. part of the country of Bengal. This district is in extent equal to the principality of Wales; and is intersected by innumerable rivers and creeks, all of which are salt, and through the whole tract nothing but brackish water is found; and it is generally uninhabited, except by tygers and deer. The navigation by boats through the Sunderbunds is very romantic, and boats coming down to Calcutta in the hot season are obliged to take this route. The trees are all of small size, not useful for timber, but very valuable in affording a supply of fuel for Calcutta and other towns on the river.

Sunderland, s-p. Eng., in Durham, near the mouth of the Wear, on the S. bank; 13 NE. Durham, 268 N. London. Lon. 0. 40. E. Lat. 54. 54. N. Pop. in 1811, 25,180, exclusive of sea-faring men and persons serving in the army; in 1820, including these, about 35,000. It is joined to the town of Monk Wearmouth on the opposite side by a famous iron bridge, so that the whole, including Bishop Wearmouth, forms one connected town, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ m. long, and 1 wide. The high street is spacious and tolerably handsome. The general appearance of the town has been much improved within a few years by widening and repairing the streets, though a considerable number still are narrow and dirty. It contains an elegant church, houses of worship for Methodists, Presbyterians, Independents, Baptists, Quakers, and Unitarians; an exchange, a public library, a theatre, &c. The trade is flourishing; the chief article of export is coal, and this trade furnishes employment for nearly 600 vessels, besides nearly 500 keels; and the number of persons dependent on it is estimated at 20, or 30,000. In 1820, there were exported from Sunderland 421,061 $\frac{1}{2}$ Newcastle chaldrons of coals. The manufactures consist of flint and bottle glass, earthen ware, copperas, tar, patent ropes, &c. Ship building is carried on to a great extent, and a greater number of vessels have been launched here of late years, than at any other place in England. Market on Friday.—The iron bridge of Sunderland is regarded as the greatest curiosity in this part of the country, and is deserving of attention as a magnificent work of art, and as being among the first of the kind ever erected. It consists of an arch of iron frame work thrown over the river, 237 feet span, and rising 100 feet above the level of the water, so that ships of even 400 tons can sail under it, by only striking their top gallant masts.

Superga, or Supergue, mt. Piedmont; 4 NNE. Turin, 4 WNW. Chieri. It is remarkable for its picturesque scenery, and for the elegance of the church which crowns its summit.

Superior, Indian name Missisawgaiegon, i. e. Great Lake, the largest lake in N. America, and the largest body of fresh water that has been discovered. It is the most western of the chain of the great American lakes, and may be considered as the head reservoir, from which the St. Lawrence derives its waters. Its form is irregular, but somewhat resembling that of a triangle. It is 490 miles long from E. to W., 190 where widest, broad, about 1,700 in circ., 900 feet deep, and 641 feet above the level of the ocean. It is remarkable for the transparency of its waters, and abounds with fish, particularly trout, white fish, and sturgeon. The trout in general weigh about 12 lbs., but some are caught that exceed 50. This lake is as much affected by storms as the Atlantic; the waves run as high, and are equally dangerous to ships. The coast is generally elevated, in some parts mountainous, often rocky, for the most part sterile, and of difficult navigation. It contains a number of islands; the principal ones are in the north and northeast parts. Isle Royal, the largest, is 100 miles long, and 40 broad. Other large islands are Philippeau, Maurepas, Cariboa, and island of Yellow Sands. It receives more than 30 rivers, and discharges its waters into lake Huron by the straits or river of St. Mary.

The Pictured Rocks, so called from their appearance, on the south side of the lake towards the east end, are an extraordinary natural curiosity. They form a perpendicular wall about 300 feet high, extending about 12 miles. They present a great variety of forms, having numerous projections and indentations, with vast caverns, which on receiving the waves, make a jarring and tremendous sound. Among the features that attract particular admiration are the cascade La Portaille and the Doric Arch. The cascade consists of a considerable stream precipitated from the height of about 70 feet by a single leap into the lake. It is thrown to such a distance that a boat may pass dry between it and the rocks. The Doric Rock, or Arch, has the appearance of a work of art, consisting of an isolated mass of sand stone with 4 pillars, supporting a stratum or entablature of stone, covered with soil, and giving support to a handsome growth of spruce and pine trees, some of which are 50, or 60 feet high.

Sur, or Sour, t. Syria, in the pachalie of Acre, the remains of the ancient and celebrated Tyre; 18 SSW. Saida, 80 N. Jerusalem. Lat. 35. 13. E. Lat. 33. 13. N. Pop. stated by Mr. Connor, in 1820, at 3,500; Motoualis 2,000, Greek Catholics 1,200; Greek Schismatics 100; Maronites 100; Turks 100. Greek abp. see. It is now no more than a village, situated on a peninsula which projects from the shore into the sea, in the form of a mallet with an oval head. This head is a solid rock, covered with a brown cultivable earth, which forms a small plain of about 800 paces long by 400 broad. That part of the peninsula which lies between the village and the sea, that is, the western side, is open; and this ground is laid out in gardens. The inhabitants subsist on the produce of their little grounds, and a trifling fishery. Formerly they were defenceless towards the land, but the Motoualis, who took possession of it in 1766, inclosed it with a wall of 20 feet high, which still subsists. The most remarkable building is the ruins of a Christian church, at the south-east corner.

Tyre, one of the most ancient cities of Phœnicia, was founded by the Sidonians, even prior to the time of Joshua. It was comprehended in the tribe of Asher, though the Israelites were never completely masters of it. There were two cities, the oldest of which was called Palætyrus, and the other simply the city of Tyre. The former was situated on the continent, and the other on an island. Nebuchadnezzar took it, and destroyed it; but this event gave rise to a variety of opinions; for it is not known whether the city razed by that prince was Palætyrus or the new Tyre. Syria and Phœnicia had been some time under the power of Alexander the Great, when he made preparations for the conquest of this place. Built on an island, it was separated from the continent by an arm of the sea half a mile in breadth. The conqueror made several unsuccessful attempts to take it; but he at length formed a project worthy of his enterprising spirit; which was, to fill up the strait, and unite the island to the continent. The city was taken in the seventh month after it had been besieged. The sacred scriptures reckon among the number of the illustrious men of Tyre, king Hiram, the friend of David and Solomon. Two famous councils were held at Tyre; the first in 335, when Athanasius was stripped of his bishopric, and banished from Alexandria; and the other in 448, the result of which was to absolve bishop Ibas, accused of supporting the errors of Nestorius. Tyre was the seat of an archbishop, subject to the patriarch of Antioch, and had 14 suffragans dependent on it. Relics of the splendour of the ancient city are every where to be seen, as numerous and beautiful columns stretched along the beach, ruins of an aqueduct, &c.

Surat, city, Hind., in Guzerat, on the Taptee, 20 miles from its mouth; 120 S. Amedabad, 175 NE. Bombay, 200 WNW. Aurungabad. Lon. 73. 3. E. Lat. 21. 13. N. Pop. raised by one estimate, in 1796, to 800,000; by another, reduced to 600,000, which is supposed to exceed the actual number. It is one of the most ancient, as well as one of the most populous cities of India, and was formerly called the imperial port, and was the place whence Mahometan pilgrims were conveyed to Mecca, often at the expense of government. The articles of its commerce were of the richest kind, viz. diamonds, pearls, gold, musk, ambergrise, spices, indigo, saltpetre, silk, and fine cottons. But since the rise of Bombay its commerce has much declined, and now consists chiefly of raw cotton, a few of its own manufactures, and articles imported from Guzerat. The greater number of vessels that now enter the port, are Arabs. All large vessels are obliged to remain at the mouth of the river called Swallow roads, where they are somewhat exposed to storms, but the anchorage is good. The value of the exports, in 1811, amounted to 3,964,523 rupees.

Surat is situated in a fertile plain, protected on one side by the river, and on the 3 others by a brick rampart and ditch. It also possesses a strong citadel, surrounded by an esplanade. It is inhabited by a great variety of people, but the Parsees, or fire worshippers, are most affluent. In 1807 there were reckoned 1,200 Parsees of the sacerdotal class, and 12,000 of the laity. Here is a sect of Hindoos, who never willingly deprive any thing of life, and erect hospitals for the preservation of maimed or diseased animals, though this practice has now fallen in disuse. The squares of the city are large, the streets spacious, but not paved, and the dust troublesome; the larger houses are flat roofed; the houses of the common people high roofed. The civil administration of this city has been vested exclusively in the hands of the British since 1800.

Surinam, territory and colony, S. A., in Guiana, belonging to the Netherlands; lying west of French Guiana, and east of English Guiana; bounded N. by the Atlantic, E. by the river Marawina, S. by a country of the Indians, and W. by the river Courantyn. It is about 150 miles from E. to W., and upwards of 60 from N. to S. Sq. m. about 11,000. Pop. 110,000. Chief town, Paramaribo. The principal rivers in this country are the Surinam, from which the colony takes its name, the Courantyn, Copename, Seramica, and Marawina. The first only is navigable; the others, though long and broad, are so shallow, and so crowded with rocks and small islands, that they are of but little consequence to Europeans, nor are their banks inhabited except by Indians. In all of them the water rises and falls for more than 60 miles from the mouth, occasioned by the stoppage of the freshes by the tide. In the Marawina is found a curious stone, or pebble, called the Marawina diamond.

The climate, which was formerly extremely fatal to Europeans, has, within the last 20 years, been much improved, by the increased population of the colony, and the better clearing of the ground. The year is divided into two wet and two dry seasons. The highest heat during the hot season is stated at 91°; the common temperature from 75 to 84. This equal degree of heat is owing to sea-breezes which regularly set in at 10 o'clock, and continue till 5 P. M., cooling the atmosphere with a constant stream of delightful air. The settlements are chiefly on the Surinam and its branches. The soil is very fertile, producing sugar, coffee, cotton, cocoa, maize, and indigo. The uncultivated parts are covered with immense forests, rocks, and mountains; some of the latter enriched with a variety of mineral productions.

Surinam, r. S. A., which gives name to the above colony. It rises from mountains in the interior, and after a winding course from S. to N. of about 150 miles, flows into the Atlantic, Lon. 55. 40. W. Lat. 6. 25. N. It is about 4 miles wide at its mouth, and from 16 to 18 feet deep at low water mark, the tide rising and falling above 12 feet. This breadth and depth is continued upwards of 8 or 10 miles, to the junction of the two branches of the river. It is navigable for small craft 120 miles. It is a very beautiful river, watering a fertile country, with flourishing settlements. Paramaribo is situated on it, 18 miles from its mouth.

Susquehanna, the largest river of Pa., which is formed by the E. & W. branches. The E. rises in Otsego lake, N. Y., and the W. in Huntingdon co. Pa. They unite at Northumberland. The river then runs SE. into the head of the Chesapeake, in Md. It is $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile wide at its mouth, but is navigable only 5 miles. The Susquehanna was surveyed in 1817 by commissioners appointed by Pennsylvania, who reported, that below Columbia no ascending navigation was practicable, but that, at the expense of about \$20,000, every obstacle might be removed to the head of the 2 branches. A canal is in progress, which is to unite the waters of this river with those of the Schuylkill.

SWEDEN, km. in the north of Europe, comprising the greatest part of ancient Scandinavia, bounded N. by Norwegian Lapland, E. by Finland, the gulf of Bothnia, and the Baltic, S. by the Baltic, and W. by the Cattegat, Skagerrak, and Norway. Lon. 11. 10. to 23. 20. E. Lat. 55. 20. to 69. N. ; 1,000 miles long from N. to S. ; and from 200 to 300 broad. Sweden lost Finland in 1809, which was ceded to Russia ; and in 1814, received the accession of Norway, and relinquished Swedish Pomerania. The above limits exclude these countries, but include Swedish Lapland.

Divisions. Sweden comprises 3 general divisions, Gothland, Sweden proper, and Norrland, which are subdivided into provinces. But the present political divisions are the 24 following län or governments. Gefleborg, here included in Norrland, is sometimes included in Sweden Proper.

Of this population 1,176,967 were males ; 1,288,099 females : 778,647 under 15 years of age ; 1,471,619 between 15 and 60 ; 213,251 between 60 and 90 ; 549 upwards of 90. Pop. of Sweden in 1819, 2,557,781 ; of Norway 905,128 : total of the united kingdom, 3,462,909. Sq. m. of Sweden 182,266 ; of Norway 160,348 : total 342,614. The population to a square mile in Gothland or the southern provinces is about 38; in the central part about 21; in Norrland only 13.

Towns. The principal towns are Stockholm, the capital, Gottenburg, Carlsrona, Nordkio-ping, Malmo, Gefle, Calmar, Upsal, & Fahlun.

Religion. The religion is Lutheranism. There is one archbishop, that of Upsal; 11 bishops; 70 archdeacons, and 3,620 other clergymen. There are some Swedenborgians and other dissenters from the established religion, but they are not numerous.

Education, &c. There are 2 universities, Upsal and Lund, and 11 gymnasia. Elementary education is well attended to, and generally diffused by means of primary schools. The Swedes have cultivated the physical sciences, particularly botany and chemistry, with great success; and they have numerous library and scientific societies. The Swedish language is a dialect of the Teutonic, and bears a great resemblance to the Danish, and not a little to the English. The Swedish literati have frequently adopted the Latin as a medium of their publications.

Government. The government is a limited monarchy. The diet, or cortes, consists of 4 orders or chambers; 1st, nobles, hereditary; 2d, bishops, ex officio, and clergy; 3d, merchants or burghers, elected deputies from the royal free towns; 4th, farmers or peasants, elected from that body. Each order deliberates separately. The executive administration is equally complicated; at the head of which is the king.

Revenue, &c. The revenue of Sweden, in 1816, was 8,652,482 rix dollars banco, or 51,300,000 francs; of Norway 8, to 9,000,000 francs. The public debt, 8,361,629 rix dollars. Army, 48,000 men, one fourth Norwegians. Navy, 51 vessels, 15 of them of the line.

Inhabitants. The Swedes in general are of fair complexion, resembling the inhabitants of the north of Germany, and accustomed to plain diet and few indulgencies. In the towns this simplicity is less remarkable. But the population for the most part is agricultural, this circumstance, joined to the influence of the reformed faith and the general diffusion of education, has produced a degree of honesty among the lower orders equal to that of any country in Europe. In other respects they have the virtues and defects of people little advanced in the commerce of life.

Face of the country. Sweden though inclosed by mountains on the west and north, is in general a very flat country; along the whole road from Gottenburg on the west to Stockholm on the east, there is not a single acclivity of consequence, till within a few miles of the latter. A great mountain chain on the west divides Sweden from Norway. From this several subordinate chains separate and traverse Sweden particularly Swedish Lapland. In the south a small range crosses the province of Smaland.

Lakes and Rivers. The most striking feature in the appearance of Sweden, is the number and extent of its lakes, which are computed to occupy 9,200 square miles. These lakes are sheets of water, pure, transparent, and abounding in fish. Some of the largest are Wenner, Wetter, Malar, and Hjalmar. The principal rivers are the Dahl, Gotha, Motala, Clara, Angerman, Umea, Skelestea, Pitea, Lulea, & Tornea.

Soil and productions. Sweden is one of the least fertile countries in Europe. From a statistical survey made by government, it appears that hardly a thirteenth of the country is arable, and if the wilds of Norrland were included, not a sixtieth. The most of the country resembles a vast forest, where a farm is a small cultivated patch, with a wood of many hundred acres attached to it, and appropriated in summer to the pasture of cattle. Rye, barley, and oats, are the most common kinds of grain; wheat succeeds only in the southern provinces. Apple, pear, and cherry trees, grow but languidly. Pine, spruce, and fir, are the most common forest trees.

Climate. The climate is less severe than might be expected in so high a latitude. The winters are long, regular, dry, and cold, but not unpleasant, the winds being seldom violent. The summer is short, the spring is the most inconstant and unhealthy season. The annual quantity of rain is not great, not exceeding even in the southern provinces 19 inches.

Manufactures and commerce. Manufactures are in a backward state, with the exception of metals, particularly iron & copper. The Swedish iron is accounted the best in Europe, and is the most important article of manufacture as well as of export. The most celebrated mines are those of Dannemora. The other principal articles of export are copper, timber, tar, and alum. The mercantile navy of Sweden consists of about 11,000 vessels, carrying about 180,000 tons, and navigated by nearly 100,000 seamen.

SWITZERLAND, or Swisserland, or Helve- tian Republic, country, in the interior of Europe, bounded N. and E. by Germany, S. by Italy, and W. by France; nearly 200 miles from E. to W., and 140 from N. to S. Sq. m. according to Fehr 15,200; Hassel 18,456. The Swiss confederacy previously to 1798, consisted of 13 cantons, (the first thirteen in the following table) together with several small neighbouring states in alliance with the cantons, and other small states subject to them. Pop. in 1767, according to Fœsi, of the 13 cantons, 961,000; allies 541,000; subjects 345,500; total 1,847,500. Pop. according to a computation in 1795, of the 13 cantons 1,020,027; allies 479,300; subjects 343,500; total 1,842,827. These estimates, according to Picot, are too high. The statement in the following table is taken from Picot's Statistics of Switzerland, published at Geneva in 1819. It is the official statement which had just been sanctioned by the Swiss diet. But according to Picot many suppose it to fall short of the actual population by 200,000.

Government. Each canton is an independent republic, but for general security the cantons are united in a confederacy, governed by a general diet. In some of the cantons the form of government is democratic, but in most of them it is oligarchic. The diet, or general assembly, composed of deputies from each of the cantons, meets in rotation at Berne, Zurich, and Lucerne.

Religion, &c. The inhabitants are Protestants and Catholics; about two thirds Protestants.

Education. There are universities, at Geneva and Bâle; colleges or academies at Zurich, Berne, Lausanne, Lucerne, Schaffhausen, St. Gall, Friburg, Neufchatel, and Coire. Education is provided for by the support of primary schools. The prevailing language is the German; but French is spoken on the borders of France, Italian on the borders of Italy, and the Romanesk, or Romana rustica, in a part of the Grisons. The Swiss are hardy, industrious, and temperate; of simple manners, well educated, and ardently attached to liberty.

Face of the country, &c. Switzerland is by far the most mountainous and romantic country in Europe; it has the Alps not only along the whole of its southern and eastern frontier, but throughout the chief part of its interior. The level tracts, or vales of considerable extent, are found in the northwest. The three branches of the Alps found chiefly in Switzerland, are the Helvetian, Pennine, and Rhætian Alps. Some of the highest summits are Mont Cervin, Mont Velan, Finster-Aarhorn, Jungfrau, St. Gothard, and St. Bernard.—Switzerland is much visited by travellers, and to the admirers of nature it offers scenes almost unrivalled.

Glaciers. The glaciers are lakes or fields of glittering ice and snow. They occupy the elevated hollows between the peaks of the highest mountains, extending sometimes 15 or 18 miles in length. Enormous masses called avalanches, sometimes detach themselves and roll down with a frightful noise.

Lakes and rivers. Switzerland is remarkable for the number of its romantic lakes. The principal ones are Geneva, Constance, Neufchatel, Lucerne, Zurich, Thun, Brientz, Zug, Bienne, Wallenstadt, Sempach, and Grieffen. These 12 comprise 686 sq. miles. Constance lies between Switzerland and Germany, chiefly in the latter. The Rhine and the Rhone rise in Switzerland, and the other principal rivers are the Aar, Reuss, and Tessin.

Climate. The climate is generally salubrious; mild in the valleys, but severe in the elevated regions.

Soil and productions. A large part of Switzerland is rugged and sterile; but the productive parts are cultivated with great care. The chief products are wheat, barley, oats, maize, flax, hemp, and tobacco; but the breeding of cattle forms the grand source of national subsistence. The quantity of corn is considerably less than the consumption of the inhabitants. The manufactures are various; linen, lace, thread, woollens, cottons, clocks, watches, &c. The exports consist of manufactures, cattle, sheep, hides, tallow, butter, and cheese.

History. The ancient name of Switzerland was Helvetia; but the canton of the Grisons was included in Rhætia. The population of Helvetia, in the time of Cæsar, as is learned from his Commentaries, was 336,000. The foundation of the liberty of Switzerland was laid by William Tell, and the three mountainous cantons, Schweitz, Uri, and Unterwalden, were first formed into a confederacy in 1308.

Sydney Bay, bay on S. coast of Norfolk island, in the S. Pacific ocean. Lon. 168. 2. E. Lat. 29. 5. N.

Sydney, t. New Holland, capital of the British settlement of Botany Bay, in New South Wales, within the bay of Port Jackson, 7 miles from the mouth, on a cove to which it gives name. Lon. 151. 25. E. Lat. 33. 15. S. Pop. in 1802, 2,500; in 1817, 7,000. H. 1,000. It stands principally on two hilly necks of land, with a proportion of flat ground intervening. These form together Sydney cove, which is one of the finest natural basins of water that can be imagined, and for safety and convenience rivals the finest works of art. It is perfectly secured against all winds, and vessels of any size may lie here in the greatest safety. The town covers a considerable extent of ground, but its general appearance is rude and irregular; for several years after it was founded little or no attention being paid to laying out the streets; great improvements, however, have been made within a few years past, and it is now comparatively regular. The houses are generally small and mean, though there are many public buildings as well as houses of individuals of respectable appearance.

It contains a good market, a bank, established in 1817, with a capital of £20,000, two public schools, a printing office from which is issued a newspaper, a bible society, a Sunday school institution, and there are also several private seminaries. The harbour of Port Jackson is perhaps exceeded by none in the world. It is navigable for vessels of any burden about 7 miles above the town, i. e. 15 from its entrance. The views from the heights above the town are bold, varied, and beautiful. From the excellence of its situation there can be little doubt but that Sydney will become a place of importance. See Botany Bay.

Sydonia, t. Syria; 12 NE. Damascus. It is situated on S. side of a hill, on the top of which is a celebrated Greek nunnery, founded by the emperor Justinian, who endowed it with a considerable revenue, and gave them 300 Georgian slaves for vassals, whose descendants are the inhabitants of the town, and profess the Greek communion.

Syene, or Assuan, or Essouan, t. Upper Egypt, on east side of the Nile; 6 miles below the first cataract; 375 S. Cairo. Lon. 32. 55. E. Lat. 24. 8. N. It is the most southerly town of Egypt, forming its frontier towards Nubia. It is celebrated in the annals of ancient astronomy, by the attempt made about 276 B. C. by Eratosthenes to measure the height of the sun, according to which Syene was said to lie directly under the tropic. A well was formed, which was supposed to mark the precise moment of the summer solstice, by the image of the sun reflected in it. But according to modern observations Syene is found to lie north of the tropic. Here is still a small temple, supposed to be an ancient observatory; also the remains of a Roman bridge, and a handsome stone quay. But the principal ruins of Syene are those of a Saracen town, which are very extensive, including the city wall, built with unburnt bricks, and flanked with square towers. Many large houses, as well as mosques, are in a state of extraordinary preservation. In the Nile opposite to the town, is the island of Elephantina, remarkable for its ancient ruins. Although Syene is considered a military station, yet the aga is not provided with any force, and the castle is of no strength. The climate is healthy, and in the vicinity are various aromatic plants.

Symio, or Symi, (an. Syme.) small isl. in the Grecian Archipelago, near the coast of Natolia, at the entrance of a bay called the gulf of Symio. Lon. 27. 34. E. Lat. 36. 38. N. It consists almost exclusively of mountains of rock, producing nothing but a little fruit in the gardens. The inhabitants all reside in the town, built near the top of a high rocky mountain, containing 1,800, or 2,000 houses, neatly built and whitewashed. The streets are from 3 to 5 feet wide, steep, unpaved, and dirty.

Syra, (an. Scyros.) isl. in the Grecian Archipelago; 12 S. Andros. Lon. 24. 52. E. Lat. 37. 27. N. Pop. 3, or 4,000 Greeks. It is about 60 miles in circuit, very mountainous, but produces plenty of barley, wine, figs, cotton, and olives, as also good wheat. The air is moist, and cooler than in the neighbouring islands. The town of Syra is built round a steep mountain; between it and the harbour may be seen the remains of grand buildings, which made a part of the ancient city of Scyros.

Syracuse, or Syracusa, city & s-p. Sicily, in SE. part of the island, in Noto; 30 SSE. Catania, 115 SE. Palermo. Lon. 15. 27. E. Lat. 37. 3. N. Pop. about 15,000. H. 4,261. Abp. see. It was anciently a rich and populous city, now greatly reduced; but still has an excellent and beautiful harbour, capable of receiving vessels of the greatest burden, and of containing a numerous fleet. The city was anciently of triangular form, 22 miles in circuit, and consisted of 4 parts, viz. Ortygia, between the two harbours; Acradina, extending along the sea-side; Tyche, an inland division; and Neapolis, forming the western part. At present the only part inhabited is the SE. corner, containing Ortygia, and a part of Acradina. It is insulated, walled, and entered by draw bridges. The streets are regular, but narrow, and the houses tolerably built. It contains a hospital, and a number of churches and convents. The cathedral is the ancient temple of Minerva. The exports consist of wine, oil, hemp, nitre, and wheat. The environs are fertile.

Syracuse was founded by a colony of Corinthians B. C. 736. It became the largest and most wealthy city in Sicily, and according to Thucydides, Strabo, and Cicero, possessed a greater population than Athens, or any other Grecian city. It was at one time governed as a republic, at another by Gelon, Hiero, Dionysius, and other rulers. It was besieged B. C. 414 by the Athenians; and again B. C. 215, by the Romans under Marcellus and Appius. It was defended with effect near 3 years by the genius and enterprise of Archimedes; but at last fell into the hands of the Romans B. C. 212, and continued in their possession till the downfall of their empire. Here are remains of the ancient amphitheatre, of an oval form, 300 feet in length, and 200 in breadth; the arena, seats, & passages of communication were cut out of the rock. The catacombs still exist, and form a remarkable feature of Syracuse. They are only 7 or 8 feet high, but their extent is such, that they form a kind of subterranean city, with a number of narrow streets, some of which are said to be a mile long, and contain tombs and sepulchral chambers. The speaking grotto, or as it was called by the ancients, the Ear of Dionysius, is a cave 170 feet long, 60 high, and from 20 to 35 wide, with so strong an echo, that the slightest noise is overheard in the small chamber near the entrance, in which Dionysius is said to have listened to the conversation of his prisoners. The fountain of Arethusa, still a striking object from its discharge of water, no longer boasts of ornaments, being the resort of the laundresses of the place.—Natives, Theocritus, Moschus, and Archimedes.

Syria, called by the Orientals Scham, country, Asia, forming an important part of Asiatic Turkey, bounded NW. by Natolia, NE. by the Euphrates, SE. & S. by the deserts of Arabia, and W. by the Mediterranean. Sq. m. according to Malte-Brunn, exclusive of the deserts, 52,000. Pop. 1,800,000. It comprises 4 pachalics, Aleppo, Tripoli, Damascus, and Acre. The country of Palestine lies in the SW. The chief towns are Aleppo, Damascus, Hamah, Hems, Jerusalem, Antioch ; the seaports, Alexandretta, Tripoli, Bairout, Saida, Sur, Acre, and Jaffa.

The leading features in the physical aspect of Syria, consist of the great mountainous chains of Lebanon, or Libanus, and Anti-Libanus, extending from N. to S., and the great desert lying on the south-east and east. The valleys are of great fertility, and yield abundance of grain, vines, mulberries, tobacco, olives, excellent fruits, as oranges, figs, pistachios, &c. The climate in the inhabited parts, is exceedingly fine. The commerce has never been so great in modern as in ancient times, and has of late diminished. A very extensive land communication has generally been carried on from Syria with Arabia, Persia, and the interior of Asia ; but the domination of the Wahabis in the former country, and the civil wars of the latter, have almost blocked the passage of the pilgrims and the caravans. Syria is inhabited by various descriptions of people, but Turks and Greeks form the basis of the population in the cities. The only tribes, that can be considered as appropriate to Syria, are the tenants of the heights of Lebanon. The most remarkable of these are the Druses and Maronites.—See Druses.—The Maronites inhabit the district of Kesraouan, which rises behind Tripoli. They are more peaceable than the Druses, are Christians, have joined the Romish communion, having renounced all the heresies of their founder Maron, except the marriage of the priesthood. The mulberry is their chief object of cultivation. Their chief place, and the residence of their patriarch, is Cannobine. Their number is supposed to exceed 100,000. No country was more celebrated in antiquity than Syria. In the southwest was the country of the Israelites. Phœnicia, particularly its cities of Tyre and Sidon, were famous for commerce. Damascus was long the capital of a powerful kingdom, and Antioch was once a royal residence, and accounted the third city in the world in wealth and population. Balbec and Palmyra still exhibit splendid ruins of their ancient greatness.

Pop. in 1812, according to Burckhardt, 4,000; $\frac{1}{4}$ Jews, a few Christian families, and the rest Turks. It is situated immediately on the west bank of a lake, called in the scripture the lake of Genesareth, the sea of Galilee, and the sea of Tiberias; upon a small plain surrounded by mountains. It contains about 500 houses, mostly small and mean; 1 mosque, 1 church, and 2 synagogues. It is about a mile in circuit, in the form of an irregular crescent, and inclosed towards the land by a wall. The situation is hot and unhealthy. It was named in honour of Tiberius, and was long the capital of Galilee, and, after the destruction of Jerusalem, was for some time the residence of the high priest. It was eminent for its academy, over which a succession of Jewish doctors presided till the 4th century. The Jews have now here two schools, which have libraries moderately furnished with Hebrew books, and in the Syrian synagogue are some beautiful copies of the books of Moses. The place is frequented by Jewish pilgrims. In the time of Christianity it was the see of a bishop. Near it are warm baths.

Table Mountain, mt. Pendleton district, S. C., near NW. border of the state; 3,168 feet higher than the surrounding country, and about 4,000 above the level of the sea. It presents on one side a tremendous precipice of solid rock, according to Drayton, about 900 feet nearly perpendicular; but more recent observers state it at less than 300 feet. At the bottom is a dismal valley, apparently sunk as much below the level of the surrounding country, as the mountain rises above it. The precipice, viewed from the valley, appears like an immense wall rising up to heaven; and the awe which it inspires is considerably increased by the quantities of bones which lie whitening at its base, the remains of various animals which had incautiously approached too near its edge. The summit of this mountain is frequently enveloped in clouds.

Tabor, or Hradistie Hory Tabor, i. e. The Camp of Mount Tabor, t. Bohemia, capital of a circle; 10 NE. Bechin, 38 S. Prague. Lon. 14. 28. E. Lat. 49. 27. N. Pop. 3,726. It was founded by the Hussites, and from it the Hussites obtained the title of Taborzi, or Taborites. This, by reason of its situation on a mountain, and the river Luznice, is naturally strong; being fortified in the ancient manner, with a ditch, walls, and bulwarks.—Pop. of the circle, 157,639. Sq. m. 1,272. The soil is fertile, adapted to tillage and pasture: the Bohemian is the only language spoken here.

Tabor, now Gibel el Tor, mountain of Palestine; 48 N. Jerusalem. It is celebrated in scripture as the mount of transfiguration, and is entirely detached from any neighbouring mountain, and stands on one side of the great plain of Esdraelon, and is of the figure of a broken cone, 800 or 1,000 yards in height, & is covered with small trees from the top to the bottom. The summit, according to Maundrell, is 2 furlongs in length, and 1 in breadth. It is highly cultivated, and was formerly surrounded by walls and had a citadel, of which now only a few stones remain. From hence we discover to the S. a series of valleys and mountains, which extend as far as Jerusalem; while to the E. the valley of Jordan, and lake Genesareth, appear as if under our feet: the lake seems as if inclosed in the crater of a volcano.

Tangier, (an. Tingis, or Tinja), t. Fez, situated at the W. entrance of the straits of Gibraltar; 38 WSW. Gibraltar, 108 NNW. Fez. Lon. 5. 50. W. Lat. 35. 48. N. Pop. 10, or 15,000. Tangier has been an object of eager contest between the Moors and Portuguese, and was possessed by the English from 1662 to 1784; it afterwards became a distinguished station for piracy; but the disuse of this practice in Morocco has diminished the importance of the town. It now subsists chiefly by supplying the British garrison of Gibraltar with cattle and vegetables. The country around has but few productions. The bay of Tangier is not very safe when the wind is in the west, having been encumbered by the ruins of the mole and fortification; the cables are liable to be torn and the ships to be driven on shore. Tangier, viewed from the sea-side, presents a pretty regular aspect, but within it exhibits the most disgusting wretchedness.

It is situated on the east coast, on a steep craggy mountain, anciently called Taurus ; is a strong military position ; remarkable for its churches, some of which are profusely decorated with marble. It has a harbour, and exports wine, hemp, &c. In the environs, the sea-water, which makes, at certain times, a dreadful roaring amidst the rocks, has given room to an idle conjecture, that the water absorbed by Charybdis, is here evacuated. It was formerly a magnificent city; some ancient ruins afford an idea of its former splendour, the theatre, the naumachia, the cisterns, and the aqueduct, being all objects of admiration to the traveller. The theatre is a splendid monument, almost, unrivalled for its position and high state of preservation. In the tenth century, Taormina was taken from the Greek emperor, by the Arabians, at that time one of the strongest places in the island; it was by them called Al Moezzia, which name it retained a considerable time.

It is situated on a rising ground, on the coast of the Mediterranean, at the mouth of the river Francoli. The harbour is indifferent, and not much frequented. The town is built on a hill, and surrounded with walls & turrets, and has a magnificent Gothic cathedral. Under the Romans it was the capital of the province, called Tarraconensis. It was, at one time, one of the chief cities of Spain, and is said to have contained upwards of 2,000,000 inhabitants, probably a great exaggeration. In 516, a council was held here, in which monks are first mentioned; when it was ordained that the sabbath should commence on Saturday evening. The environs at Campus Tarragonensis is esteemed one of the most fertile spots in Europe. Tarragona has but few remains of its ancient grandeur. It was besieged & sacked, in 1811, by the French under marshal Suchet.

der are Turks, who migrate in summer with their families to the mountains. It is surrounded with a double wall, but the houses are mean, mostly of only one story, partly built of earth, and partly of stone; but the situation is delightful, and the surrounding country exceedingly fertile. The port is about 7 miles from the town. The principal exports are wheat, barley, sesame, cotton, copper, and gall nuts; imports, rice, sugar, and coffee. It contains two public baths, a church, several mosques, and caravanseries.—The ancient city of Tarsus, the capital of Cilicia, is said by Arrian and Strabo to have been founded by Sardanapalus. It was adorned by a number of magnificent temples, as well as with a gymnasium and theatre. Its inhabitants enjoyed the privileges of Roman citizens, and the city rose to such distinction, as to rival Athens, Antioch, and Alexandria, in wealth & grandeur, as well as in the arts and sciences.—It is venerable as the birth place of St. Paul.

TARTARY, or Tatary, name vaguely applied to a most extensive region, occupying almost all of the central part of Asia, extending from the Caspian sea to the Pacific ocean, having Asiatic Russia on the north, and China, Hindoostan, and Persia on the south. It is distinguished into two great divisions, Independent Tartary, comprising the western part, and Chinese Tartary, lying to the east; but these divisions are not well defined, some include Little Bukharia and Thibet in the one, and some in the other. Thibet is also often considered as an appendage to Hindoostan, and not included in Tartary.

Independent Tartary is separated from Chinese Tartary by the desert of Cobi and the mountains of Belur Tagley. It comprises the countries of Bukharia, Turkestan, Charasm, and the country of Balk, which now forms a part of Cabulistan. It is inhabited by a number of different tribes of Tartars, as Usbecks, Taujiks, Calmucs, Turcomans, Kirghises, &c., who are mostly of the Mahometan religion, and lead a pastoral, or a wandering and predatory life. This country was formerly the seat of the great empire of Tamerlane or Timur. The most important kingdom of Independent Tartary is Great Bukharia. See Bukharia, Charasm, &c.

Chinese Tartary is a country of immense extent, comprising more than 60 degrees of longitude, and 20 of latitude. On the southwest lies the country of Thibet. The country of Little Bukharia lies on the west. North of Thibet & east of Little Bukharia is the great desert of Cobi or Shamo, which extends from east to west nearly 2,000 miles, and is generally covered with black sand.—The most remarkable feature of this country is its great elevation. It consists chiefly of a vast elevated plain, supported, like a table, by the Altai mountains on the N., and the Himmaleh range on the SW. The elevation renders the climate cold. A large portion of it is barren, and destitute of vegetation & water. It is thinly inhabited, and contains no large towns; and is but little known. The great rivers of Siberia rise on the northern side. Some of the rivers of China rise in the southeast part. The great river Amur, or Saghalien, rises from the Altai mountains, & traverses the country to the eastward.

This vast region is inhabited by numerous tribes of wandering Tartars, or Tatars, some of the principal of which are the Monguls, Manshurs, or Manchos, Kalkas, Ortous, Eluths, Baschkirs, Kalmucs, Tartars of Kokonor, &c. They own the supremacy of the Chinese empire, but it is necessary to secure their allegiance by giving pensions to the chiefs. These tribes exercise these right of making war upon each other. They are devoted to Shamanism, or the religion of the lamas, and in each distinguished place there is a sovereign priest.

It is the residence of the Deb rajah, of considerable extent, very populous; intersected by the river Tchintchieu; of a very salubrious climate; its chief manufactures are brazen images, and paper made of bark. The castle is built of stone, and forms a square, the walls of which are 30 feet high. The citadel is very lofty, of 7 stories, each from 15 to 20 feet high. About the middle is a row of projecting balconies, to each of which are curtains made of black hair, always drawn at night. Below, the walls are pierced with small windows, apparently for the admission of air rather than light.

Tatta, district, Hind., in Sinde, comprising the delta of the river Indus; about 150 miles long, and 50 broad. It is much intersected by rivers; mostly sandy and barren, fit in many parts only for pasturing camels and goats; it also produces rice & salt, and the rivers abound with fish. It has been subject about 40 years to chiefs called Ameers of Sinde. Chief town, Tatta; chief port, Corachie.

Tatta, city, Hind., capital of the above district, near the bank of the Indus, about 130 miles from the sea; 156 WNW. Amedabad, 340 SSW. Moulton. Lon. 68. 17. E. Lat. 24. 44. N. Pop. about 15,000. It stands in a fertile valley, is 4 miles in circuit; some of the houses are built of brick and mortar, but the greater part of mud and timber. It was formerly famous for its commerce and manufactures, but all this greatness is much diminished, though it still carries on a considerable traffic. The Indus was formerly much deeper than at present. On a hill, about a mile from the town, is an immense number of Mahometan tombs: the mausoleum of Mirza Isa is uncommonly magnificent.—Dr. Robertson was of opinion, that Tatta was the Pattala of the Greeks.

Tavai Poenamoo, isl. in the S. Pacific ocean, being the most southerly of the 2 which form New Zealand, and separated from the northern island by a channel called Cook's straits, discovered by captain, (then lieut.) Cook, who sailed round them both in the year 1769. It is about 500 miles in length, from SW. to NE., and from 55 to 140 broad. The sea coast near Cape West is low, rising with a gradual and easy ascent to the foot of the mountains, and being in most parts covered with wood. From Point Five Fingers down to Lat. 44. 20. there is a narrow ridge of hills that rise directly from the sea, and is covered with wood; close behind these hills are the mountains, extending in another ridge of a stupendous height, and consisting of rocks that are totally barren and naked, except where covered with snow. A prospect more rude, craggy, and desolate, than this country affords from the sea, cannot possibly be conceived; for as far inland as the eye can reach nothing appears but the summits of rocks, which stand so near together, that instead of valleys, there are only fissures between them. From Lat. 44. 20. to Lat. 42. 8. these mountains lie farther inland, and the sea coast consists of woody hills and valleys of various height and extent, and has much appearance of fertility; many of the valleys form plains of considerable extent, wholly covered with wood, but it is very probable that the ground, in many places is swampy, and interspersed with pools of water. Lon. 184. 45. to 193. 18. W. Lat. 40. 36. to 47. 20. S.

Taunton, t. Eng., in Somersetshire; 31 NE. Exeter, 140 W. London. Lon. 3. 16. W. Lat. 50. 59. N. Pop. in 1811, 6,997; in 1821, 8,339. H. 1,503. This town, in point of size, buildings, and respectability of inhabitants, may vie with many cities. Its extent from E. to W. is nearly a mile, and it consists of 4 principal streets, which are wide, and very well built, and contains 2 parish churches. There is a noble and spacious market place, in which is a handsome commodious market-house, with a town-hall over it, the building of which was completed in 1773. The markets are large, and kept on Wednesday and Saturday. The woollen manufacture has flourished in this town almost ever since its first introduction into England by the emigrants from Flanders; the first manufacture being established here about the year 1336. Of late years it has decayed. A silk manufacture was introduced here in 1780, and now employs a great part of the inhabitants. Taunton is an ancient borough by prescription, and has returned members to parliament from the year 1294.

Taurida, government, Russia, bounded N. by Cherson and Ekaterinoslav, E. by the sea of Azof and Caucasus, S. and W. by the Black sea. Sq. m. 43,355. Pop. 260,000. Capital, Simpheropol. It consists of 4 parts, the Crimea, the island of Taman or Phanagoria, the land of the Tchernomorski, or Black sea Cosacs, and a considerable tract to the north of the Crimea, between the Dnieper and the Berda. It contains some fertile tracts, but has immense steppes, many of them almost entirely unproductive, and all deficient in water. The surface is much diversified, and the country very thinly inhabited. See Crimea, &c.

Taurida, a range of mountains in the Crimea, extending from east to west towards the southern coast, dividing the peninsula into two parts; the northern, much the larger part, being neither pleasant nor healthy, the southern part narrow, but having a fine climate and fertile soil. The most elevated summit, Tschatyrdag, is 6,800 feet above the Black sea. They are composed chiefly of sand, lime stone, and marl slate.

Tauris, or Tabris, city, Persia, in Adirbeitzan; 180 SSE. Erivan, 400 NNW. Ispahan. Lon. 46. 31. E. Lat. 38. 20. N. Chardin, more than a century ago, estimated the population at 550,000; now said to be reduced to 30,000. It is situated in an immense plain, at the foot of a mountain, on the banks of a small river. It is supposed by D'Anville to be the ancient Gaza, or Ganzaca, but by sir William Jones, to be Ecbatana. It was the favourite city of Haroun el Raschid, and according to Persian tradition was founded by Zobeida, one of his wives. In the time of Chardin it carried on an extensive trade with Russia, Tartary, India, &c., had extensive manufactures of silk, and 300 caravanseries. The ruins of the ancient city cover a great extent of ground, but exhibit a very mean appearance, being nothing but a confused heap of old mud walls. Tauris is now one of the most wretched cities in Persia.

Captain Kotzebue, who visited this city in 1817, thus speaks of it. "Tauris is generally placed on a level of comparison with Ispahan and Schiras; and I am sorry for it, as I could have wished there had been a Persian town, of which I might have said something favourable. In describing one, it is impossible to use the term streets; they are in fact narrow foot-paths between small irregular walls; and those of Tauris are as dirty as those of any other city. The bazar here, which is reckoned the first in Persia, is nothing more than a narrow passage, the top of which is covered with rush mats, & it is lined on each side with small shops. Here and there the passage opens into a spacious court, occupied by caravansaries, which are merely stone ware-houses, where merchants deposit goods, which they afterwards retail in shops. This famed bazar winds round the city in a variety of crooked directions, and is constantly filled with idle people and speculators of every description. The merchants appear wretchedly poor."

The town, now called Old Tcherkask, is situated on the Aksai, a branch of the Don, and is surrounded on all sides by water and marshes. It is overflowed every year from the beginning of April to the end of June; the ground floors of the houses are under water during all that time; and the marshes and pools that remain, occasion various diseases. The houses are of wood, and are raised from the ground upon wooden piles. The disadvantages of the situation led to the removal of the capital, in 1814, to New Tcherkask, at the confluence of the Aksai and Turlov, 5 miles from the old town. The streets of the new town are wide and straight, but the houses, as is common in this country, are merely wooded huts. Before the removal, the old town contained a gymnasium, six churches, 2,916 houses, and 14,815 inhabitants; but the schools, public offices, courts of justice, &c. have all been removed to the new town. In 1821, the old town contained about 10,000, and the new about 5,000 inhabitants.
